Judy and her kittens want to be outside!

Ever since Judy was found in an abandoned house with her kittens and taken to the Kitten Rescue facility, she has wanted out. She wanted her kittens to meet their father, Max, and see and explore the outside world. Unfortunately, some of her kittens were adopted to other homes, where Judy can't contact them. She even got adopted out eventually, with Ice and Judy jr. to her own house. Judy really feels for all her kittens, but the first ones to get adopted, Maxine and Hazel, seem a little foggy in Judy's mind. It's been so long - can Judy bring her family back together in time? Or will she completely forget Max and some of their kittens?

Is Mavis eating too much?

Recently in the past few days, there have been some troubling reports coming in about how much Mavis is eating. Below is a video of Mavis eating with gusto - is she eating too much? This has been the topic of debate between Naya and Stripy. Stripy is arguing that Mavis is eating because she is still suckling her kits, but Naya is arguing that the kits should have been weaned a few weeks ago. Currently, they are 2 and a half months old. But Mavis doesn't even let them suckle that much. So at the moment, we might come back to the article of yesterday - Is Mavis becoming a tame house cat?

The best of the best cat scientists are currently observing Mavis's current behavior. She is spending a lot of time in another part of the room than where her kits are, and they are separated by a climbable wall. Mavis does not spend a lot of time with her kits - she has to make sure they are weaned first.

Mavis is definitely taking care of her kits - but is she taking care of herself? Eating too much will make her stomach hurt and she will gain a lot of weight. Is she smart to eat this much? We don't know. But when Mavis is eating with this amount of gusto - is she starting to like the food? Does she like it more than fresh prey? Who knows? But most people right now are starting to agree that Mavis is becoming a tame house cat.

“My best guess is that they spayed or neutered Mavis during the surgery!”

- NORTH, A MULTI SPECIES BEHAVIORIST

In the time leading up to this video, there was a short period where Mavis was wearing clothes - a Velcro vest. She probably had had a surgery, and the humans didn't want her scratching or irritating her fur. Could the people have done something to Mavis that made her start to become a tame house cat? Or was the surgery for something else?

This is truly a mystery to cat kind. North and his team are working hard to figure out what happened to Mavis - and what the humans will do to her. Meanwhile, Mavis is still eating and sleeping twice as much as usual. Can North and Pals figure out this mystery, or will Mavis become a human pet?
