

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Humans are making Rudy and her kittens eat in a line!

Because humans put their food bowls in a line, Rudy and her kittens have made a habit to eat in a line. This is unfair, because the Rudy and her kittens can't eat unless they eat in a line. Rudy has publicly expressed that she feels like the humans want her and her kittens to do certain things because the humans think that it is cute. Rudy feels abused by the humans, but what can she do to stop them from lining up the food bowls? Bite their legs?

Video above - Rudy and her kittens eating in a line.

Some of the food bowls are hooked together, but if they weren't next to anything, The cats could eat on opposite sides of the bowls. When the food bowls are next to something else, there really isn't any wiggle room while you're eating. Judy, the messy eater of the family has something to say on this.

"Whenever I eat," Judy told the press, "I always wiggle around. If I were in the middle of Rudy's kittens, eating, my neighbors would be shoved by accident a bunch of times. I'm not sure what I would do if they got mad and kicked me out! I can't go long without food!"

Recently, Rudy developed a solution to this problem. When her massive food bowl was placed at the end of the row, instead of eating in a line, Rudy went around to the side that none of the kittens were eating from, and she ate there. It worked out well for her, and no cat complained as she wiggled around while trying to find the most comfortable eating spot. This way, Rudy was still able to overeat and feel comfortable when her belly swelled a little from a massive intake of food.

On the right, you can see an image of how Rudy broke ranks and went to the other side of the row to eat her fill. She definitely was able to take her time.

Image above - Rudy breaks ranks for more eating room.

One concern that North, a multi species behaviorist expressed recently was that what if when Rudy and her kittens find a way to defy the humans' system to make them eat in a row, what if they changed their tactics? North has realized that the humans can ensure that the cats eat in a line by putting the bowls against the wall of the room - this way the cats would all have to eat from 1 side. Hopefully humans aren't that smart.

"Outsmarting humans? No problem!"

- BLACKSPOTS JR., ONE OF RUDY'S KITS

When Rice, one of Rudy's kits has a thought about what he would do if he was forced to eat in a line again. He said "I can go without food for quite a while," and he meant it. The way he got nourishment was by knocking Rudy out cold and then rolling her over and suckling her speedily drying up milk. Rudy's kittens don't suckle anymore, so her milk is drying up. Her kittens are three months old, but Rice has never given up suckling easily.

Subscribe again and enjoy!