
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Juliet sleeps through the transfer of power for cats!

During the inauguration of Lemon, a cat of the royal family, Juliet was filmed sleeping through the whole thing. This is against the law, because all cats are required to attend or watch the inauguration. Juliet overslept instead.

In the image above, Juliet is comfortably sleeping with her kittens on top of her. She looks very content and happy, so any cat can sympathize with Juliet. However, a mistake is mistake if it is against the law. Juliet will have to go to trial, and she can face a 500 dollar fine or a month in jail.

Lemon, the member of the royal family to take over the cat throne though, has a very big heart. He does not want to see cats prosecuted in his name. He might just pardon Juliet for oversleeping, and any other cat who missed attending or watching his inauguration.

Lemon though, is a security stickler. He never turns his camera on in a video meet, and he only uses the icon on the left for any sites or accounts. Almost no cats have actually seen his face, so Juliet is actually pretty lucky if Lemon comes himself to pardon her. Unfortunately, no cameras allowed.

Juliet is feeling flustered at missing the inauguration, but her kittens were just so soft, and she was so comfortable. Juliet thinks personally that she shouldn't have to go to trial for a little oversleeping. "If you look at the photo of me sleeping," Juliet told the press, "I look very, very comfortable. Now can you understand why I overslept?"

"I'm going to get Juliet an alarm for her birthday," says Harvey, her father, "Juliet has recently had a serious oversleeping problem. She needs an alarm to keep her organized and on time for work, events, and most importantly, inaugurations."

"I overslept even more than Juliet - at least until I got a hard job as a multi-species behaviorist!"

Juliet will have a small trial in a minor trial building tomorrow. The results of that trial will determine if Juliet will be proved innocent, or guilty, or if she will be pardoned, or not, and what kind of fine or jail sentence she might get.

Juliet overslept until the end of Lemon's acceptance speech, and then finally one of her kittens woke up and panicked. It took 3 kittens to rouse Juliet, and by then, the whole inauguration was over. Later that day, Juliet got a letter in the mail that had a time for her trial.
