

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Harvey has been seen chasing his tail!

Just yesterday, Harvey has been seen passionately chasing his tail, as seen in the image above. The biggest question is “where has this behavior come from?”

Image above - Harvey passionately chasing his tail.

---

North, a multi species behaviorist, reports on this. “Harvey has to get his energy from somewhere,” North has told the press, “Harvey could be feeling adrenaline from something he didn’t like, or he could be excited about something that happened recently. It just takes a big feeling.”

A lot of cats are trying to guess any big feelings that Harvey could be feeling. North thinks trauma, Rudy thinks anger, and Judy thinks love. These could all be possible answers, but no cat knows for sure why Harvey has suddenly become able to chase his tail despite his age.

After his tail chasing episode was over, the press swarmed Harvey for answers. He calmly shoved them away and strutted off to go and eat. He made a point about eating in a private area. Is it possible that Harvey is embarrassed or nervous about what might happen if he tells the truth?

The press went to Makenna next to ask about her opinion, because she had stuck her paw into Harvey's cupboard as seen in the video on the right. Makenna calmly declined answering their questions, which was strange, especially when Reposado mumbled, "Makenna is usually super talkative, what has come over her?" This is only making North even more confused, and he has enough to worry about without this. North has started to fret about whether Harvey has started to take bad drugs, or if he has been drinking too much soda. (Yes, Harvey does drink soda.)

Image above - Harvey, relaxing after a thrilling episode of chasing his tail.

Lemon, the king of the cats and also a brother to Harvey has said that he thinks that Harvey is in love. Lemon has known Harvey all of his life so his opinion is put into deep consideration. Judy agrees strongly, but Rudy disagrees strongly. "Harvey hasn't loved for a while," Judy claims, but Rudy disagrees with, "I think that Harvey is angry because you keep visiting and he has to keep seeing your ugly face." Judy launches herself at Rudy with a snarl of fury, and tackles her into some tuna cans piled up nearby. Rudy rakes her claws across Judy's muzzle, and the camera stopped recording.

"You can tell me who you love, just whisper their name quietly in my ear!"

- RUDYJUDY, ONE OF HARVEY'S FRIENDS

"I think that Harvey has found another true love," North says emotionally, "he has always been sad since my mother left him. A new mate would give Harvey more happiness as he gets older, which he deserves after a long, 8 year long life. I really hope that his relationship works out."

A lot of cats are happy for Harvey, because he is becoming a little more energetic. Harvey now plays board games, reads books out loud, helps cook, and he plays with humans who come in the room if no other cat feels like it.

Subscribe again to find out if Harvey is in love!