
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Harvey and Coffee are bonding!

Yesterday, Harvey showed a truly beautiful side. In the image above, Harvey was seen draping a chubby foreleg over Coffee, his late son. Harvey is also holding Coffee's head gently with a paw, which is truly beautiful. Cats are starting to think that Harvey is starting to really bond with Coffee!

Image above - Harvey draping a chubby foreleg over Coffee, his son.

Just before she left, Harvey's mate had Coffee. Coffee was a month old when his mother left him with Harvey. Harvey fed him squirrel and mouse mush, along with the occasional vole, which had the softest flesh of any prey. Harvey raised Coffee in a den under a rocky outcropping, with a meager thorn barrier to protect the den from predators. North and Reposado attended preschool and elementary school, and Juliet met with a tutor because of her speech problems. Juliet was born with apraxia, which affects her ability to pronounce vowels and put multiple syllables together.

In the image on the right, Harvey is glancing warily at the camera. He must already be starting to feel more protective of Coffee, because they are starting to bond. This is the instinct that any parent has.

“Harvey has been very sad since his mate left him after she had Coffee,” says North, Harvey’s firstborn kitten and also a multi species behaviorist, “but it is good to see that Harvey has found a cat to bond with now. This will help him feel better in the days to come.”

Reposado, on the other hand, has been secretly feeling jealous that Coffee is taking up all of Harvey’s love at the moment. Reposado has started to “play fight” with Coffee, but Coffee always gets a couple of scratches because he is less experienced at fighting and is younger than Reposado. This is concerning Harvey, so he decided to teach Coffee a super high level battle move. Reposado was shocked at this, and even more jealous.

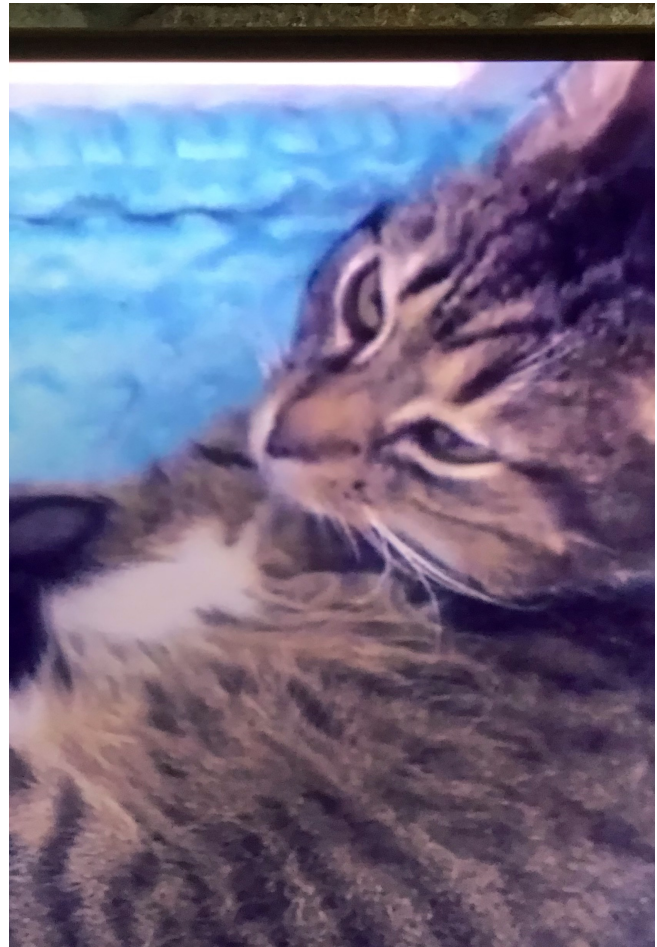

Image above - Harvey glancing warily at the camera.

“Harvey is my father too - can’t he show me a little more love sometimes?”

- REPOSADO, ONE OF HARVEY’S SECOND BORN KITTENS

Harvey and Coffee have been spending lots of time together recently in cupboards, playing games and bonding. Harvey’s spirits are higher these days, since he added a special night out with Makenna every Friday night. Harvey has more energy to do things, which has pleased almost everyone.

When Harvey drapes a chubby foreleg over a cat, it is one of the symbols that means that he is feeling a parent’s love for that cat.

Harvey is really starting to bond with and love Coffee - then he can hope to make sure that he has a fully bonded family.

Subscribe again for images that could make you cry or laugh!