
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Humans have locked Harvey out of his cupboard!

As in the photo shown above, Harvey has been locked out of his cupboard. A human who came in the room shut the door, locking Harvey out and making him cold without the warm blankets and pillows of the cupboard.

Image above - Harvey sitting by his cupboard's closed door.

With the same problem, Coffee was in the cupboard when the human closed the door. Coffee couldn't get out, so why did the human put him in there?

"After replaying the tape many times, I think that the human wanted to give Harvey medicine," says North, a multi species behaviorist, "They put Makenna in a cat carrier, and closed the door! Reposado and I were in the other cupboard at the time, too! That means that Harvey was the only one outside, the only one that would receive the medicine!”

In the photo on the right, there is an image of Harvey sleeping after his dose of “medicine”. This concerned North, who rushed from work to check on Harvey, who had just eaten and gone to bed. Makenna told him that “Harvey acted normal, and he said that whatever medicine he might or might not have eaten has not made him feel strange.”

Harvey did remember something that concerned North. Harvey said that, “there is a blank space in my memory for a minute after I ate the medicine dosed food, but for some reason, my chubby foreleg was hurting after the blank minute!”

North spent the night trying to find out what could have happened to Harvey, and he actually came up with something at dawn. Every once and a while, when they can’t take a cat to the doctor, the human might administer a shot. Shots aren’t very painful, but it was good that the person made sure Harvey forgot it. North said quietly that, “a shot is when a needle is stuck in a part of your body, and pretty deep at that!”

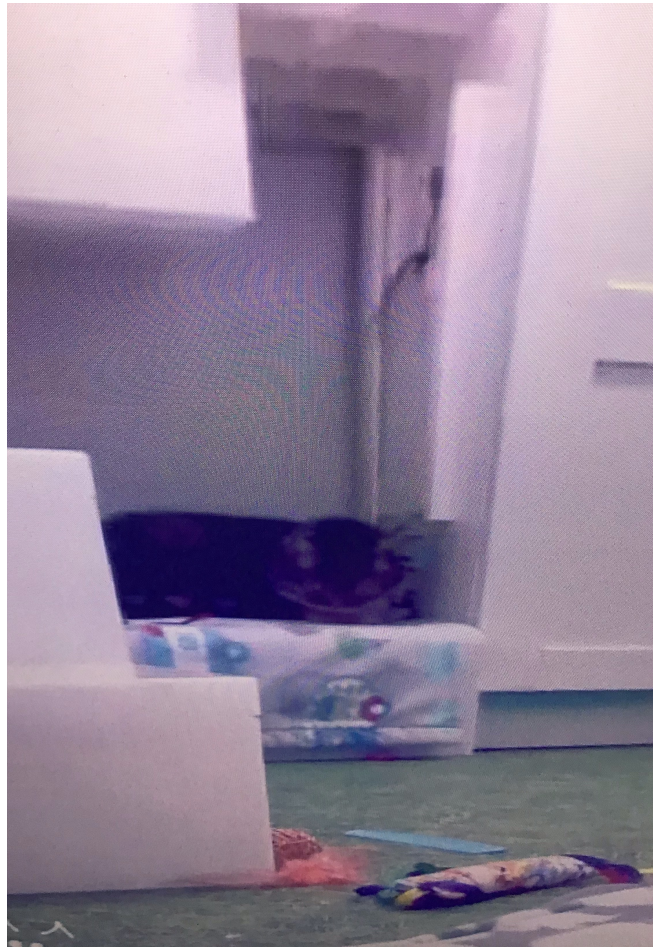

Image above - Harvey asleep after dose of “medicine”.

“My chubby foreleg hurts as if something injected or poked into it!”

- HARVEY, WHO DOESN'T KNOW ABOUT SHOTS

Harvey has recovered well, though, and he says that he feels better than ever, and his winter allergies have cleared up. Who knows if some of this is the effects of a shot - but don't tell Harvey that. He is feeling better than he has in a long time, even though he had to spend about 5 hours on the cold spot outside of his favorite cupboard.

Harvey has been feeling good, but something serious has happened. Mavis and Naya have been captured.

Subscribe again to hear more about Mavis and Naya!