

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Juliet is trying to bury her food!

In the wild, after cats have eaten a meal they would bury the remains of a little piece for later. Juliet is not in the wild though, but she still has the same instinct to cover up her food. In the image above, Juliet is using her precious toys to cover up what food she couldn't eat. However, food is still showing to Juliet's dislike. A whole lot of cats are a little amused by this act of wildness. Some cats are surprised that Juliet wants to cover her tracks so much, but others are heartbroken that Juliet thought that she had to use her lovely toys to cover up the remains of her meal. One cat is concerned because the fish toy was expensive.

Image above - Juliet's covered up food bowl.

"This is right up my alley," says North, a multi species behaviorist,

“this is only temporary. Juliet will get used to not doing it eventually, but in the meantime, we will see more of this. And, Juliet will probably figure out an easier solution to this problem in good time.”

Harvey, Juliet’s father is concerned about her. Harvey is more concerned that she has food to cover up than the fact that Juliet is trying to cover up her food. Juliet is still nursing kittens. Right now, she is only eating what she usually does without kittens. Juliet needs to be eating 3 times as much as she has been eating recently, or her body won’t be able to produce enough milk for her kittens. Harvey cares about all kittens as his own, so he is very concerned about Juliet’s lack of eating.

Judy is also concerned. As an experienced mama cat, she knows how to raise kittens. Unfortunately, she put up with her kittens suckling until her milk dried up and she got tired of eating 9 meals a day instead of 3. This is a reason why she is not the best advisor on raising kittens. But she does have good advice.

“Juliet needs to eat more,” says Judy, “if she eats a regular diet, her milk will dry up in approximately 1.2 days. Her kittens still need to suckle, so their mama needs to start to chow down.

Anyone who can encourage her should do so

“We’re all going to try to help Juliet find a solution to her eating situation!”

- RUDY, JULIET’S COUSIN

right away. I will pay anyone who tries to get Juliet to eat more a packet of gummy mice. I’ll even get the one with extra sugar!”

Every cat is trying to pitch in to help Juliet. Any good cat would want the best for kittens, so if the kittens need help, the kittens will have it. Juliet feels good to see how many cats have decided to help her. Unfortunately,

Judy was forced to sell her fancy skateboard to pay for a monster bag of extra sugary gummy mice.

Subscribe again to hear how Juliet and her kittens are doing!

Image above - Juliet nursing her kittens.