North has been prodding Harvey for 1.5 minutes!

As seen in the disturbing image above, North has been prodding Harvey! I don't know how Harvey could stand it! North was also prodding the spot where his leg stump was, so it must've hurt! What is North trying to do? Hurt his father? Or just play? The playing theory has some evidence, too. After this photo was taken, North rolled over on his back, exposing his belly to Harvey. This is a sign that North trusts Harvey not to slice it open (at this point, Harvey will do that), but he wants to see Harvey try. Harvey however, is not amused about the prodding, and he doesn't want anything to do with North right now. After the prodding was done, Harvey sent North out of the cupboard.

On this paragraph there would usually be a quote from North, a multi species behaviorist. However, when North is the head of the problem, we can't just go ask him for his thoughts about how he acted. Now it's our turn to act behaviorist.

Naya has something to say about this. She says that North was “brave” to stand up to Harvey and prod him to his dislike. North knew the consequences, yet he set forth on the journey. When Harvey got mad, it was what North was expecting. North knew that Harvey would be mad at him, yet he continued ever strong.

Mavis, on the other hand, has a different thought. She says that Naya thinks North is “brave”, because Naya likes North but doesn’t quite know how to show it. That is why she kept using medieval terms. Mavis thinks that it was bad of North to keep prodding Harvey in a spot that hurts because does North want Harvey to feel pain, or does he just want to play so much that he is going to desperate measures? At this point, there’s almost no difference!

This morning, Harvey did something to North that makes many cats feel like Harvey is somewhat amused by what North did. He emailed the photo to the right to North:

The photo was nice, which makes many cats think that Harvey wants to make up. This is nice, considering that North started the problem. However, Harvey can’t stay mad at anybody for more than a day. That’s one of the reasons that he is a therapist. Harvey is patient, lovable, a good listener, and hard to stay mad at.

“North probably should have been the one to ask to make up - I mean, he started the problem in the first place!”

When Harvey is happy, all cats feel happy. That is why a lot of cats were very glad after North got Harvey a milkshake to cheer him up and try to make up. North regrets his choice, but now that he can laugh about it with Harvey, he must feel a little better. However, North has drawn a line to signify where to stop when wanting to play.
