
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Rudy has taken Stripy's disappearance the worst!

After Mavis's march was over, Rudy, one of her sisters, became very, very sad. North, a multi species behaviorist, says that Rudy is so sad that Stripy is gone. Rudy's mate, Blackspots, is doing all her can to comfort her. He even found a basket just like the one she used to rest in with all of her kittens. Rudy was grateful, and she fell asleep with him in the basket. However, this is not going to change her mood. So, it's time to set an appointment with a therapist.

Image above - Rudy, on her favorite chair, sadly curled up into a ball.

Harvey was informed of all the stuff Rudy is sad about, and what she likes to do in her free time. He also asked a strange question, "are any of Rudy's kits dead?" Mavis informed him that none of them were dead.

However, Blackspots jr. was born with a lame leg (the front right one). Harvey nodded and settled himself comfortably into his chair. Harvey loved meeting new clients, especially ones who knew him already. It would be interesting to see how Rudy reacted to her first therapy session.

Rudy came in at 2:00, on the dot. She was with her mate, Blackspots, but Harvey told him to wait outside after assuring him that Rudy would be just fine. Rudy settled herself on a soft, pillowy couch, and she looked up sadly. "You're supposed to be my therapist, right?" Harvey nodded and smiled warmly. The rest of the therapy session was requested not to be filmed.

After her therapy session, Rudy seemed happier. Blackspots didn't know why, but she even tried to cook dinner. Blackspots was sent out of the kitchen, even though he was the main cook, but he stayed by the door and cringed every time he heard sizzling or a pop and once Rudy's yowl. After a clatter of pans and a dropped glass, Rudy ran out of the kitchen, lightly scorched, and told Blackspots to continue what she was making. Blackspots peeked his head into the kitchen, to see glass shards on the floor, pans in the sink, all sizzling, and a wet, black hamburger bun that looked like it had just stopped being on fire. It would take until 7:00 to clean this up, so Blackspots ordered delivery from Rudy's favorite restaurant.

"I've never seen her this happy - and right now? This is just wrong somehow!"

- BLACKSPOTS

However, reports of things were coming in. Reports of cats being found, abandoned at the side of the road. Coincidentally, all of the cats had been catnapped by Lemon. In his getaway, he must have dumped out the cats he didn't want and kept the best ones as servants. And, late into the night, there was a report that a black and gray striped cat had been found. It was Stripy.

Subscribe again to hear more about plans to take down Lemon!

Image above - Rudy, peacefully sleeping after her therapy session with Harvey.