
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Juliet is looking sad, but nobody knows why!

As seen in the image above, Juliet is very sad, but nobody knows why! She let 5 of her kittens suckle, but not her last one even though there was space. Juliet ate with 5 of her kittens, but didn't care how much she left in the bowl and about whether it would be better to bury the remains. Juliet tucked 5 of her kittens into bed, but didn't tell them a story like usual. She just went up to the windowsill and gazed out at the starry sky sadly.

Image above - Juliet sitting by herself at the foot of the stairs leading up to her condo, looking very, very sad.

Soon, cats started noticing something. Juliet would tuck the same 5 kittens into bed every night, but not Wilbur Spots. Not for 3 days straight. She would let 5 of her kittens suckle, but not Wilbur Spots. Not for 3 days straight. And, she only ate with 5 of her kittens, but not Wilbur Spots. Not for

3 days straight. This could just be odd behavior, but Harvey pointed out something that changed the way the cats were thinking. He said, “it’s not just that. No cat has actually seen Wilbur Spots for 3 days. Wilbur Spots is missing, don’t you see? This is why Juliet is so sad! She is missing a kitten!”

Reposado sprung into action right away. As Juliet’s sister, Reposado wouldn’t seem too conspicuous when she revealed that she knew that Wilbur Spots was missing. Poor Juliet just nodded when Reposado asked, which confirmed Harvey’s suspicions. Wilbur Spots, one of Juliet’s kittens, was missing. And he had been for 3 days.

Wilbur Spots, is the runt of Juliet’s litter of kittens. He is white with black spots, and is just over 2 months old. He doesn’t quite know how to play fight, the prime suckling spots at Juliet’s belly, and where the food is when a human brings some in. Because he is smaller and less intelligent, Graypelt, the largest of Juliet’s litter, will sometimes bully Wilbur Spots. Recently, Juliet has confirmed, Graypelt dared Wilbur Spots to go outside and bring something back. Wilbur Spots hasn’t come back for three days, and Graypelt is in big trouble for taunting Wilbur Spots into doing something dangerous that could get him hurt or lost.

Image above - Wilbur Spots, one of Juliet’s kittens who has not been seen for 3 days straight.

“Wilbur Spots still doesn’t quite know how to play fight. How will he survive, let alone find his way back!”

- JULIET, WHO IS FEELING TERRIBLE

Mavis and Stripy, who has just gotten back to the delight of many cats, are organizing search teams to scour the area near Juliet’s house for any sign of a kitten. Wilbur Spots should be easy to find, because of his mostly - white pelt. However, his white pelt would get dirtier easier, so it might turn sort of brownish. That wouldn’t help, because it would make it harder to locate Wilbur Spots, even with teams searching all over.

Subscribe again to find out if Wilbur Spots has been found!