
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats and Lemon and his falcons are officially at war!

Last night, Harvey had a prophetic dream. Or at least he claims as such. In the image above, Harvey woke up and his eyes went wide after supposedly seeing into the future that Lemon would attack in the morning. He raced out of his house, after waking North and Reposado and Coffee. Harvey outran a bicycle, to get to Mavis's house before dawn. She gave all important cats a call, and prepared for an attack. The news service had caught on to the story that Harvey could be a prophet, but they exaggerated what happened after the dream.

Image above - Harvey, waking up after a supposedly prophetic dream about Lemon attacking.

Oddly enough, the attack did come in the morning at 8:51 A.M. It was just a few falcons, but luckily Mavis and a large group of cats were there to give them some scratches to remember. If they weren't there, the falcons could terrorize one home at a time, and there would have been more casualties. Right now, however, the real focus is on what Mavis is going to do about this. And guess what? She declared war. Many cats were shocked by this, but they were all understanding. With the force of most of the falcon community, Lemon could overrun the cats with terrorizing attacks.

Another big thing that cats are confused about is Harvey's supposed prophetic dream. Mavis personally thinks that it wasn't prophetic, but she doesn't have any other explanation for why he knew that Lemon was going to attack. North, a multi species behaviorist, has a thought on this. "I'm a behaviorist, and I can probably guess that the next attack by Lemon would be bigger. This one was just a scouting mission, but it was still an attack. Harvey's not a behaviorist, but Lemon is his brother. They have known each other for eight years. Harvey could probably guess Lemon's attack tactics because he's known them for his whole long life. I think Harvey got a kick about having claim to a prophetic dream, so that's why he used that story."

Image above - another shot of a falcon sighting too close to the cat communities to be safe.

"I thought Naya would like to stay and fight, I mean, it's her style usually!"

- MAVIS

Now, because it is technically a war zone in the place many cats are living right now, whole families of cats are thinking of moving to a different area until the war is over, including Naya. No one would have thought that Naya wanted to leave, but it turns out that she does. Naya and Mavis's kittens want to stay, but right now only Mavis says yes. Naya wants to leave with her kittens to go somewhere safe until it is safe from falcons in her usual home. Stripy has the strongest house - and the biggest. All of the kittens could stay there for the war, it would be safe, and they'd have plenty of cats to play with. However, Naya is holding strong to her opinion. She really wants to leave with her kittens.

Subscribe again to hear more about this war!