
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Juliet is furious about being milked secretly!

Yesterday afternoon, Juliet finally figured out why she didn't have any milk to give to her kittens 3 days ago, which made Wilbur Spots cry. Now she did have a small amount of milk, and she gave it to her kittens to make up. But, Reposado finally let slip that the male cats didn't need to give her any more Kudo's. Juliet asked sharply what Reposado meant, and Reposado let the whole thing spill.

Image above - Juliet, still in shock after Reposado confirmed that she and Mavis milked Juliet secretly.

Juliet was furious. First she tried to run to the male cats' bush to force them to pay for the milk, but Mavis succeeded in restraining her. However, Mavis wasn't prepared for when Juliet kicked her front leg with a chubby, which would form a bruise later. Juliet was about to go and rampage again, but Harvey tackled her gently and sat on her until more cats could come and deal with her outburst. Eventually, there was a group of ten cats wanting to know what was wrong. And Juliet spilled the whole story with her concerns. Makenna, one of the cats and a dietary scientist had a question. She asked, “did you expect those male cats to keep buying you Kudo’s, which are very bad for your health? They stopped because they knew it was bad for you, and Reposado and Mavis were just trying to make sure that they’re kitten got the milk it needed.”

Juliet didn’t know how to respond. “Still, you could’ve asked first!” Juliet starts sniffing, and then continues, “Wilbur Spots was crying because I didn’t have any milk left for him and my other kittens a couple of days ago!” This statement led some cats to let out sympathetic meows from their spot. Juliet was starting to get the sympathy of the cats.

Harvey eventually guided Juliet back to her house where he tucked her in for a nap. Sometimes, Juliet napped and then felt a lot better afterwards. Hopefully, this would be true right now. Harvey was just glad that Juliet was starting to feel better. Harvey however was annoyed at having to bring out the sit on Juliet. That was his signature move, and Harvey didn’t like to use it too often. However, today it had been critical to keeping Juliet under control.

“I’ve never seen Juliet that furious before, even when I broke her toys!”

- REPOSADO, JULIET’S SISTER

and the cats would have to attack Lemon first, before he got out his super weapon.

Subscribe again to hear more about how the cats could defeat Lemon!

Image above - Wilbur Spots, cowering in a corner after containing his quiet crying about how Juliet didn’t have any milk left just then.