

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Harvey is in a coma!

Early this morning, North discovered something truly terrible. Harvey didn't wake him up like usual, and there were no waffles on the kitchen table when North went downstairs. Harvey was still as a stone in one of his cupboards, and he did not respond to any of the ways North tried to wake him up in. All of Harvey's kittens, and Makenna planned ahead and canceled and school and work for the day. The doctor was called around 6:00 A.M. and they came to the conclusion that Harvey was in a coma.

Image above - Harvey, resting in one of his cupboards, in a coma.

---

Comas don't usually occur naturally for cats. Sometimes they can go through something incredibly traumatic and fall into one, or they might get very sick and their body shuts down and they go into a coma. Harvey was not sick at all by the doctors' tests, and they were nowhere by 7:00 A.M. when Makenna, a dietary scientist had an idea.

"Several days ago, for North's birthday, Harvey made a pound cake." Says Makenna, a well known dietary scientist, "the cake was massive, with large amounts of flour, water, yeast, eggs, butter, and sugar. However, Harvey has never eaten anything with yeast in it before. So, it is possible that because he ate so much of the cake, the yeast triggered something in his body. Even if it wasn't exactly pure yeast, there is still the essence of yeast in the cake. I think that Harvey is in a coma because of that."

However, many cats are skeptical about this theory. The yeast died when it was cooked, so how could it have triggered some reaction in Harvey? No cat was getting anywhere, until one of the doctors examining Harvey noticed a small lump in his belly. This was unusual, because this lump looked out of place. The doctor was fascinated by it, so he sent another doctor to get an x-ray machine. North, Makenna, and Harvey's other family and friends watched anxiously. They didn't have anything better to do.

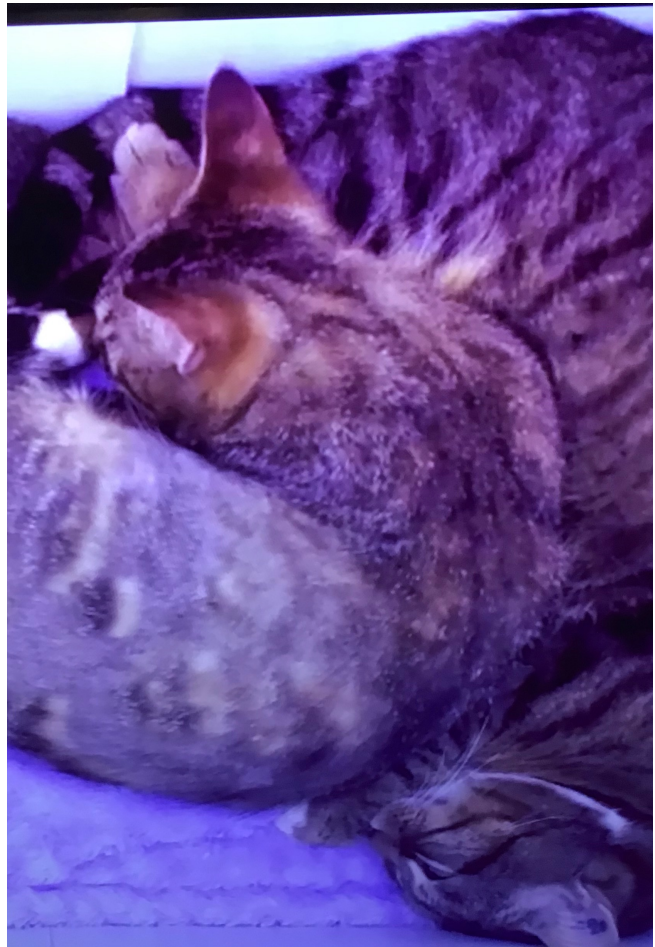

Image above - North, resting by Harvey's still comatose form.

"Harvey's pretty old - will his body survive a surgery for the tumor?"

- NORTH, WHO IS BESIDE HIMSELF WITH WORRY

tried to fight the tumor, but wasn't strong enough, and it shut down. That is why Harvey is in a coma. The tumor needs to be surgically removed."

Subscribe again for more on Harvey's tumor and coma!