The strange cat is meeting Coffee!

Yesterday, a mystery letter arrived in the mail. It was addressed to Coffee, and for some reason, none of the security officers could open it and check its contents. So after some debate and a few bets exchanged, it was decided that Coffee would open the contents of the letter himself with a platoon of soldiers right there just in case. Coffee, who was feeling the best he had in days (still not good), opened the letter. Inside there was a single piece of paper, and on that paper the words Fairy Garden - Monday the 19th, 8:00 P.M. were inscribed. Almost immediately, cats began arguing about what to do. Everyone agreed on one thing - these were instructions to a meeting place. They also agreed on another thing. That Coffee should not, under all circumstances go. Coffee thought otherwise, but a leader only holds so much power when their subjects are treated as nearly equals and play a valuable part in each decision. Harvey was the only one that thought that Coffee should go, but with soldiers and him right there. However, he regretted voicing his plan when Mavis reminded him that the soldiers and staff didn't know yet about the strange cat. Better to keep that hushed up. However, Mavis had a different idea. She thought that Coffee should come, but with 3 other decoys with him. So, it would look strange, with 4 Coffees meeting one strange cat, but at least Coffee would be safer.

Mavis was starting to get bored with this whole thing. At least until the local police station in her home area gave her a call with the strangest information on it. Wilbur Spots had gotten Rudy's bank account password from Naya and was accused of stealing nearly 100,000 dollars from it. However, he had been run under a lie detector and had told the strange truth - that he had sold the password to a strange, 3 colored cat for a 100 dollar gift card to the fried fish place. Mavis licked her chops at that - the fried fish place always put more cabbage than fish on her sandwiches if she asked nicely and gave a large tip. However, this was big news. That meant that the strange cat had nearly 100,000 dollars of Rudy's money, and that is a lot - enough to fund a bunch of things. And unfortunately in this world, money usually means power.

“Guess what? Rudy forgot to change her bank account password!”

- NAYA, WHO'S DELIGHTED

Naya has to pay a larger fine - 19,000 dollars for giving away Rudy's bank account password. Naya planned on getting this money back someday.
