

CATS ILLUSTRATED

The “movie” is playing without any interruptions!

Yesterday's Cats Illustrated issue didn't have much of the actual “movie” in it. So, today's issue is just the movie story without any interruptions. Enjoy!

Harvey ran across the large plain, and as he covered distance with his large and powerful strides, his surroundings seemed to become darker, wetter, and more humid. “I hate these conditions,” Harvey muttered to himself, glancing forlornly at his only sugar cube that he had brought along, which was wet from the humidity and already starting to mold. So that is what the monster was in Harvey's mind. Some kind of strange monsters that destroyed sugar. Now that you think about it, Harvey is wearing sugar based armor and uses sugar like any other building substance to construct his hut. Also, sugar must actually be a main food group in Harvey's strange mind.

Image above - Juliet, who is still waiting for news on Harvey's current health status.

Harvey encountered his first monster after only a bit more of running. His lone sugar cube had molded completely, and Harvey dropped it off. Also, his armor was starting to look a bit green, mushy, and unfit to fight in. The monster that had appeared a couple hundred meters off looked like a giant bird, made of water. Of course! Sugar melted quite fast in hot water! No wonder they were the monsters in Harvey's mind. But the water bird seemed to be getting closer, and closer, but didn't seem to be moving at all. This was a very odd phenomenon to behold, but Harvey didn't seem fazed. He walked up to the bird slowly, drawing a sword made of hard, compacted sugar. Then, he sliced the bird through across the stomach. The bird seemed to dissolve into water, and Harvey quickly sheathed his sugar sword to keep it from molding on dampening. Then, Harvey started running again, and as he ran, Harvey's surroundings got darker, damper, and then, finally, Harvey reached a clearing of light, and there was another cat in the clearing.

Image above - a falcon, who could tell something was very wrong in the cat world.

“Harvey was doing good in the fight against his mind, but now he’ll lose for sure!”

- NORTH, WHO'S DISTRAUGHT

Okay. I said that this issue would be completely dedicated to Harvey's "movie", but a pressing issue has arisen. From the jail, the thief cat has somehow escaped. No police officers were harmed, no locks were picked, and there was no sign of the thief cat after they had gone. But also, at the hospital, Harvey's body went missing. And unfortunately, so did the bottle of the American red flower nectar.

North is in tears because of this, because even if Harvey beats his mind, the thief cat can just infect him again. This is very bad news for Harvey, and all cats. The thief cat may be more powerful than anything that could have been predicted.

Subscribe again for more on these hair raising issues!