

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

A group of terrorists are bombing houses!

Yesterday, there were 3 very sad accidents. 3 houses were bombed, including the house of a mother and her 5 kittens. 2 kittens were killed by the explosion, just 2 of the 3 casualties that resulted from these malicious attacks. The police are trying to trace the bombers, and find a motive for bombing the houses of innocent cats. However, many cats are appalled and concerned about these bombings. The houses bombed seemed to have nothing in common, and some cats are getting worried that their houses will be bombed too. Bombers on the loose is a very serious problem, and local authorities are advising that cats make sure that their cellars or basements can withstand a bombing. However, this has caused some problems. Naya and a couple other cats have thought of these bombings as doomsday, and have spent much of their money buying out things in the grocery store, the pharmacy, and even the local clothing shop. And, when Naya's kittens went to get the milk out of the fridge for their cereal, they got the nasty surprise of watching Naya hoist the fridge and bring it down to the basement. Later, she called the school and told them that her kittens were sick with a bad flu, and that they needed to stay home. Really, Naya needed help moving all her possessions down to the basement.

Image above - Juliet, who is very concerned about house bombings.

---

Rudy is one of the cats who is not very freaked out about the bombing. Rudy's house, as it might not be large, is very strong and has withstood many more rainstorms, tornadoes, earthquakes, and natural disasters than any of her sisters' houses. Rudy has commented that, "my house was built strong, and that's the way it will stay." However, something very unfortunate happened later in the day. Rudy was going along with her business, kittens still at school, when 3 small bombs were dropped onto the roof of her house. Rudy heard the thuds, and knew that her house's roof would explode within seconds. Rudy jumped under a table, and not seconds later, 3 loud explosions rang from Rudy's roof. Luckily, the damage was not bad. The bombs had created a small hole of splintered wood in Rudy's roof, but it was easily repairable. However, cats had heard the explosions and seen the hole in Rudy's roof.

The police were called.

"I wonder - I just wonder if falcons could somehow be tied to these bombings..."

- LUNCH, WHO IS DEEP IN THOUGHT

As Rudy was questioned about what had happened, repair cats inspected the damage to her house. It was not fatal, and they repaired it quickly by installing some new boards, and roof tiles. The tiles had saved Rudy's house from worse damage than what Rudy's roof looked like now, and Rudy was considered one of the luckier cats whose house had been bombed.

Rudy's kittens were dismissed early, and raced to meet their mama in the police station.

Subscribe again for some big finds!

Image above - Judy, who's starting to jump at every unexpected sound.