

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

The terrorist has been filmed bombing a house!

Juliet, even though she would rather stay in her basement for a while, had to get some fresh air. She walked back up the stairs to her kitchen, and then went outside for a walk. Everything felt normal until Juliet heard the sound of a small plane in the air. It had a bomb insignia on it, and Juliet took out her catPhone and started filming. The plane circled, and then flew slowly over a row of houses. Near the end, the plane dropped something. It had a fuse, and Juliet zoomed in on it with her catPhone. It was a bomb, and it was headed straight for the house of an innocent cat! Juliet caught the explosion, and then turned the camera back to the plane, which was already turning away. Juliet zoomed in on the cockpit, in which sat a smug looking cat. Juliet couldn't examine the video right now, but she had clear footage of this cat bombing the house of an innocent cat.

Image above - Juliet rushing over to the phone to call the police, after filming the terrorist bomb a house.

---

The police were called by a little later, and Juliet showed them the film she had taken. Juliet uploaded the video on her catTube channel, and thousands of cats were appalled by what this cat was doing. There was even some chatter about who the bomber cat might be. But back in the police station, the police were very happy with Juliet's video. They asked if she wanted a small sum of cash for helping out, but Juliet had already spotted the jar of dum - dums on the main desk and asked for 8 of those. At least her kittens would be happy.

Cats can only speculate how the bomber cat will react to having a video of them bombing a house. It probably won't be good, and cats are offering to help Juliet with security. However, Juliet is not worried. She is still spending most of her time in her basement, and Juliet has put up a sandbag barricade just in case. However, Juliet's kittens are getting lazy, after a days worth of playing video games and the fact that they still haven't gotten their full payment of video games from Juliet yet. Cats are starting to wonder what Juliet was thinking, paying her kittens 10 minutes of video games for each pound of dirt they scooped out of her basement. They ended up scooping a bit over 300 pounds of dirt, giving them 3000 minutes of video game time, giving them 50 hours of video game time. Juliet's kittens went on a gaming spree, and have chugged through 34 of their 50 hours of video games already.

"I miss Rice jr., but doing 11 hours of gaming a day for 3 days is pretty cool!"

- RICE AND ICE

In an old abandoned building at the edge of the city, the bomber cat sat, sulking, near their plane. That blasted person Julietometer had posted a video of one of their bombings on catTube. It had five hundred thousand views in 3 hours, and climbing rapidly. Who did this cat think they were? The bomber cat would find out.

Subscribe again for an attack!

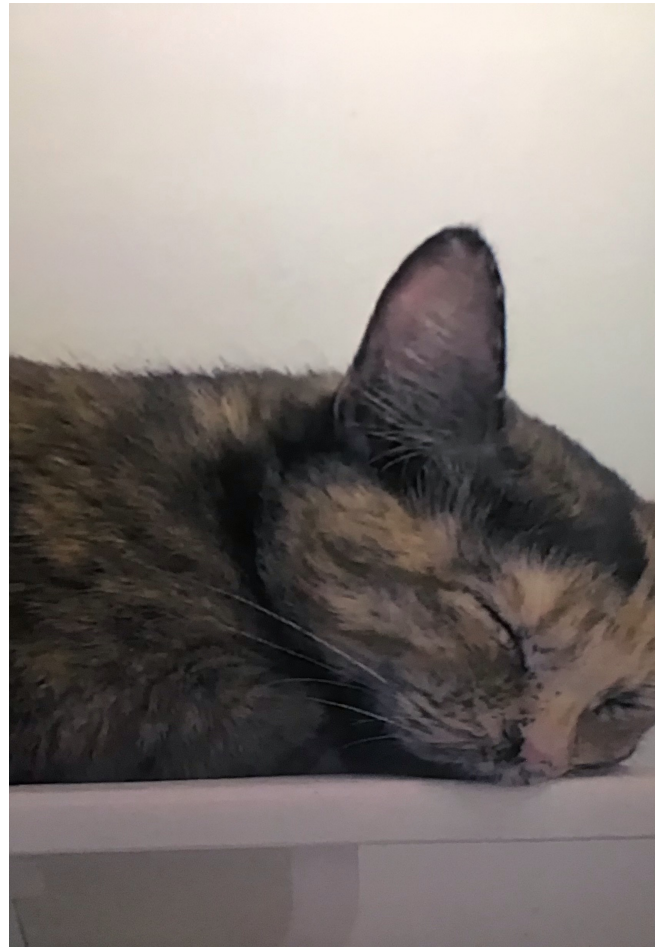

Image above - Judy, who is going to try and hibernate through all of the bombings and the resolution to the problem.