
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Lunch has started yoga!

As you may have heard in the last issue, Lunch has started yoga. As I said in the last issue, extreme disasters are one of the best ways to get cats to try new things. Mavis has joined a dance club, and Rudy and Judy have become friends. Sort of. However, it is nice to see cats trying new things. Lunch is leaving for yoga right now, by the way.

Image above - Lunch, filling up before going to yoga.

As in the last issue, we have run into a problem. How can we track Lunch in a fully booked yoga session? However, we will not waste time talking about things like this. One of our best reporters has bribed one of the yoga students to miss a class for 150 dollars. At least now we have a spot in the class.

Lunch walked up to the gym building where cats exercised on treadmills, and bicycle contraptions. Lunch made her way past the front of the gym, to the back where more private sessions occurred. Lunch went there, checked in and registered her name, and then went straight to the room where the class would take place. The class was supposed to start in 5 minutes, but Lunch wanted to get there early just in case.

Lunch had the right instinct, to get there early. However, she did not get there early enough. It seemed that the whole class got there early. "What is your name?" The yoga teacher asked. "Lunch," Lunch replied. A couple of cats snickered, and Lunch reddened. "Ah, Lunch," the yoga teacher said, pointing to an empty spot near the front of the room, "this is where you will be." Lunch made her way to that spot, and got her yoga mat out. She rolled it out, and then stood, ready for yoga.

Lunch was able to do most of the regular stretches, but she also had stretch her mindset sometimes. Lunch was not able to keep her chubby lifted in a certain position while putting both front paws behind her back. Lunch toppled ungracefully, and more cats snickered this time. "Excuse me," the yoga teacher addressed some of the cats who had snickered, "on your first time here, Mina, you couldn't even stand on 2 paws without toppling. Lunch here can hold this position for 3 times as long that you could on your first day." Mina looked a bit cowed, but Lunch shot a grateful glance at the yoga teacher.

Image above - Judy, who has plans with Rudy.

“Lunch’s yoga class seems interesting, but not as much as the attack on Rudy and Judy.”

- LUNCH’S KITTENS

attacker is unknown, but Rudy and Judy are both severely injured and have lost a lot of blood.

We would have continued this story, but something has happened. Rudy and Judy, on a pleasant stroll in the park, have been attacked and shot, each in the chubby foreleg. Their Subscribe again for an investigation!