Rudy's kittens' class has a field trip - that goes overnight!

While this may seem like an ordinary thing to some people, it is not at all ordinary. Never before has the middle school taken kittens on a sleep away field trip, let alone inexperienced 6th graders like Rudy's kittens. However, all 6 of Rudy's kittens came home with permission slips for the field trip. Rudy and Blackspots talked a lot about the matter, and decided, begrudgingly, that Rudy's kittens deserved some time away from home. It was tough, knowing that one of your aunts was depressed (Judy) and that she was getting suicidal.

The details of this field trip are technically classified to outsiders (such as us from Cats Illustrated) but we greased a few palms and managed to get the plans. The kittens will go on a 3 hour bus ride (no devices allowed, but kittens will not follow that rule), and they will arrive at the beach/nature reserve that they are going to. The first day will be spent at the beach, where kittens are supposed to collect interesting shells, but will probably just mess around, go in the water, and build huge sand castles. The teachers said that as long as the kittens do something educational, they can do it. The kittens are counting swimming and wave jumping in the ocean as gym class, and building sand castles as architecture. There is no architecture class, but it seems educational enough to kittens.

On the second day, the kittens will visit the nature reserve. They can explore, but have to jot down anything interesting they see. They will spend 2 hours there, and then will go for lunch around noon. After that, they will come home on another 3 hour bus ride (devices still not allowed).

I suppose that you are wondering, “are you guys going to cover this?” And I, the head and co - founder of Cats Illustrated, say that we are going to cover this. How, you might ask. Well, it’s a bit unorthodox, but one of our smaller reporters is going to pose as the new kitten just a week before the trip. We have set up their “parents, and they will be covering everything that happens on the trip. Also, may I ask you readers not to tell the teachers at the middle school about this, because they will kick our reporter out of school?”

“While “ancient history” is just an expression, it describes the time of Harvey’s kittenhood.”

However, it will obviously be a very fun trip, however it turns out. A beach day for kittens - not just one family, but a whole class of kittens, will be epic. Our reporter will have to join in on the fun, to blend in. That is one lucky
