

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Lunch has broken her right chubby foreleg!

While trampolining with her kittens, Lunch fell from about 12 feet and landed wrong on her right chubby foreleg. Her kitten, Black, and another kitten, Obsidian, were still getting treatment for their broken bones. Black had broken one of his thin hind legs after falling from a disastrous 35 feet, and Obsidian had cracked a rib after a trampoline collision. Many cats are saying that Lunch and her kittens' trampolining is way too dangerous. We here at Cats Illustrated, are starting to agree.

Image above - Lunch, who is resting in a separate wing of the hospital from Judy.

In the past week, there have been more reports of "dangerous trampoline activity" than reports of thefts. That is saying something, because there were more than 10 reports of thefts in the past 5 days. It is very concerning, and we here and Cats Illustrated think that Lunch needs to set some rules around trampolining for herself, her kittens, and her mate Jake, who took a bounce today and soared up 2 dozen feet. This is a concerning issue, though not as concerning as Judy's depression, obviously.

Lunch's doctor is telling her very strongly that she needs to make some rules about trampolining. She has gotten hurt, and that is when strong boundaries have to be established. Lunch's doctor even went so far to say that they would have the trampoline removed from Lunch's yard if she didn't make some serious rules. Lunch understands, however much she wants to keep trampolining like usual. She is calling her kittens and Jake at home to tell them the new rules. 1, no coordinated bounces, 2, 3 cat limit on the trampoline at all times, and 3, no disobeying the rules. This last rule wasn't really needed, but Lunch feels like 3 rules would create more of an effect on her kittens than 2 rules would make.

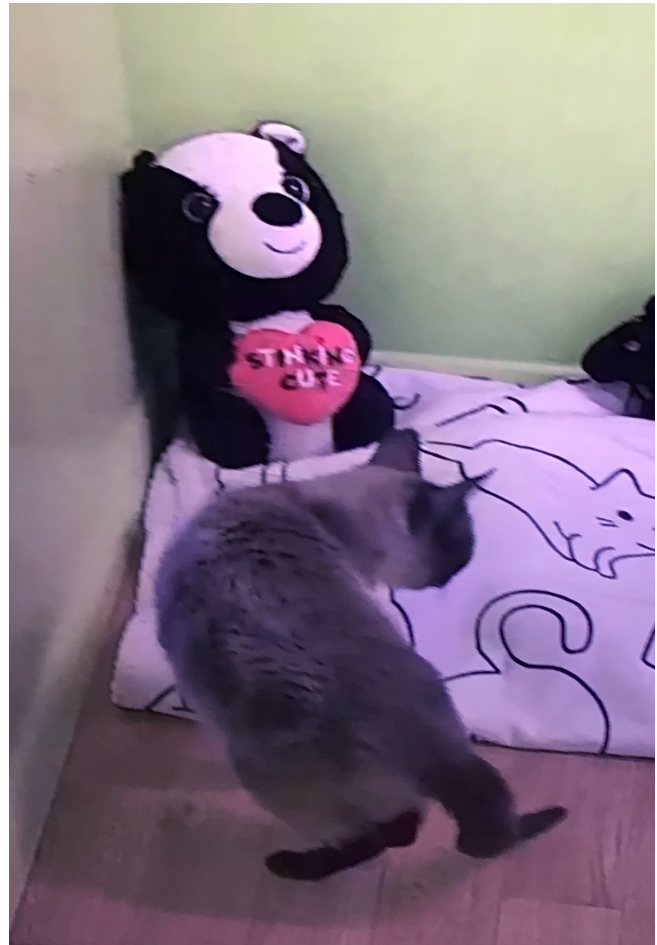

Image above - Lunch, who loves the thrill of trampolining.

Also, Lunch's kittens have been begging for Lunch to sign their permission slips to go on the overnight field trip. Juliet's kittens and Lunch's kittens are in that same class, and Lunch's kittens are looking forward to having fun playing at the beach with other kittens. Lunch is thinking about this, but

“Do coordinated bounces with a vegetable such as a cabbage count?”

- MAVIS, WHO WANTED TO SEE HOW HIGH A CABBAGE COULD FLY

secretly, without her knowing, Jake signed the permission slip of each kitten, even for Black and Obsidian, who were in the hospital. they would have to sit out on some of the fun, but they still wanted to go. When Lunch found out, it would probably be too late - the field trip seemed to be coming up fast. However, today, Lunch has made some serious progress in coming with trampoline rules. She also retracted her invitations for her sisters to come out onto the trampoline, as they might cause problems.

Subscribe again for more on Lunch's trampolining rules!