CATS ILLUSTRATED

Hurricane Harvey is upon cats!

Very early this morning, around 2 A.M, Hurricane Harvey struck. It wasn't too bad at first, with mild winds and rain, but around 5, it started getting a lot worse. Even though the police were recommending cats not to camp out in their basements because of flooding danger, many cats were doing so. Right now, our reporters are spread out, camping in the houses of Judy, Mavis, Lunch, Rudy, Juliet, Harvey, North, and even Naya. Harvey is in a camper though, driving away fast, unknowing of the reporter hiding under the bed along with about 50 bags of sugar cubes. Harvey shouldn't uncover them for too long, but who knows.

Judy feels very prepared for Hurricane Harvey. She has blocked off every part of the basement with concrete except for some pipes that bring in fresh air. The fans circulate the air well, but Judy's kittens are getting annoyed after spending long shifts on the bike. Usually, while kittens take turns spending 15 to 30 minutes on the bike, Judy plays on her video game console. That just makes her kittens even more mad, as Judy told them that under no conditions could they bring their video game console.

While the mood is tense in Judy's house, things are going along just fine in the abode of Lunch. She doesn't have a basement, but is putting up water resistant tarps on the roof. Already they have resisted the rain flow nicely, where Lunch has made several drainage pipes. The drainage pipes pipe the water into the pipes of Lunch's house, where it is filtered once and then used for drinking and bathing water. Lunch is working with her kittens to dig a small compartment to put very valuable things (other than kittens) in. Lunch is putting in a box of food and some bottled water, some money, and warm clothes if needed.

However, while Rudy and Juliet are holding up, a problem has arisen at the house of Naya. When one of her kittens went to the bathroom, they made a terrible discovery. The roof was leaking. When the kitten called Naya, she came to look. Naya had 2 thoughts going through her mind. Get out of the house, and fix the leak. "Go fix the leak!" Naya ordered her kittens, who ran off with some putty to patch up the leak. Naya wasn't ready to abandon ship quite yet.

"If Naya thought about leaving her house after a leaky roof, I fear for Judy!"

- JULIET

This was bad, but something happened at Judy's house that was much worse. From the basement, Judy, Max, and her kittens heard a loud CRASH! Judy looked outside, and saw that a part of the roof had come down, letting in the natural elements!
