
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Harvey's past client didn't frame him!

After the questioning of Harvey's possible framer, the police came to the decision that they were not guilty of Harvey's framing. In fact, they seemed to have forgiven Harvey for using the same shaping sand for every client. So, they were probably not the one who framed Harvey. However, that raised the bigger question. Who did frame Harvey?

Image above - Harvey, who's happy it wasn't a client who framed him.

Well, before we delve deep into that issue, we need to talk about a different issue. Because of time, work, and other problems, Cats Illustrated will be temporarily taking a break. This issue is the second to last issue for now, and there will be an even 200 issues. We are not sure when we will continue, but Cats Illustrated may become weekly instead of daily.

However, because we have 2 more issues, we plan to make them count. As the police think about who might of framed Harvey, Hurricane Harvey has subsided. Cats have come out of their houses for the first time in days, and have started taking down the tarps on their houses and started moving stuff out of their basement. Judy's kittens played on their video game consoles for the first time in a week, and Judy just played on her video game console, as she had done every day for a week.

As the hurricane had subsided, Naya took the time to call a repair cat to fix her leaky roof over the bathroom. The leak was conveniently right above the toilet, so Naya made sure that the drips from the roof could go into the toilet. However, the water built up after time and one of Naya's kittens had to flush the toilet. At Lunch's house, all had gone well, but Lunch decided to leave her safe box alone, as it might prove useful if there was another hurricane. The safe box had money, clothes, food (canned so it didn't spoil for a long long time), bottles of fresh water, and a fork (you can't eat canned pasta without one). These provisions were in a a regular cardboard box, which was in a metal box, which was in a hand dug hole lined with custom concrete Lunch had specially ordered. Nothing was going to happen to it.

Image above - Judy, who is happy that Hurricane Harvey has subsided, but has no idea what to do with the swimming pool in her basement.

“Wait what? You want to have a full funeral, band and everything, for a cabbage?”

- A FUNERAL PLANNER, WHILE TALKING TO MAVIS

However, back at the police station, the police had reached a dead end for Harvey's framer. The case was declared closed until further notice, and Harvey was given a small amount of money to pay for the things that had been stolen. Harvey still wanted to deliver that care package, and had already made some calls to schedule a time to meet with some of the homeless cats, in order to deliver his package. However, all cats are happy that Hurricane Harvey is over, and are in a good mood altogether at the moment. Except for Mavis, who lost a cabbage during Hurricane Harvey.

Subscribe again for the last issue!