
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats Illustrated is taking a break!

Some of you might ask, well, what's going to happen next? I can tell, you, we'll still be around, we just won't be releasing issues. From what I have heard, the break could be anywhere from a week to a month long. 200 is a nice even number, which means that Cats Illustrated has released 400 pages of writing along with some side things, which make it more like 415 pages.

Lunch is not sure what to think about us closing. On one paw, she enjoyed reading the news every day even though she didn't know how a reporter followed her to her yoga class. On the other paw, a reporter followed her to her yoga class! That's not reporting, that's nosiness! While Lunch

Image above - Rudy, who agreed to let us say that there was a 30% of a 20% chance that she might have shed a tear when she heard that we were taking a break.

ponders this, Judy faces the same dilemma. She loves reading about Rudy's problems, but has no idea where a reporter was hiding in her house while they filmed her making her basement pool!

Harvey is sad to see us pause the issues because we always depict him as loving gentle, and addicted to sugar and Jeeps. He sent us a care package, and guess what? It was a bag of 100 sugar cubes specially imported from Asia. Harvey had obviously put a lot of time and thought into this gift, so we split up the sugar cubes here in our headquarters. The sugar could still be used for an energy boost, or just for coffee. Probably just for coffee.

Mavis also brought us a present, that consisted of some chocolates, a carton of Rebecca's cabbage Ice Cream, and a very special and obviously handmade statue of a cabbage. She had obviously put a lot of work into it, and we are keeping it on display in our headquarters. Even Naya brought us a present, which is nice, even though it turned out to be a gag gift. However, more cats than we expected are bringing things in, especially the cats that we spied on the most for some reason. Is it just me or are those cats happy to see us pause the issues?

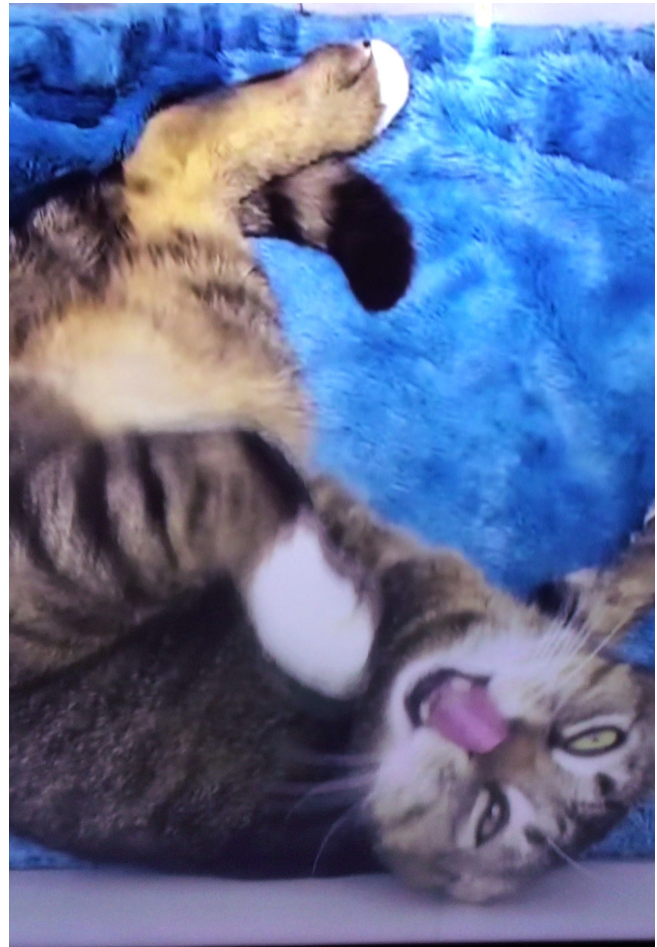

Image above - the last image we will ever show in Cats Illustrated (Harvey paid some money to get this one in).

“I guess this is the very last time that I will quote for Cats Illustrated.”

- JUDY

cross the road? It has puzzled many cats, and I encourage you to think about it during the coming break.

Well, see ya around.

Rudy and Judy are both not very happy about the fact that we publicize their fighting so much. Judy lost a client and Rudy didn't get a job because of the news, and they aren't particularly happy. However, Rudy always feels like she has the edge over Judy, and Judy feels the same, after reading these issues. But, deep inside of Rudy and Judy's brains, the grass is always greener on the other side. Finally, in this last paragraph of Cats Illustrated, something important has arisen. Why did the chicken