

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Lunch definitely has COVID - 19!

Last night, Lunch tested positive for COVID - 19. She hasn't been feeling good lately, with a bad cough and shortness of breath. The past 3 days, she hasn't even jumped on her trampoline. Lunch is pretty sick, but doesn't need hospital care quite yet. However, every night, Jake wakes up to the sound of Lunch's coughing. And every night, he gets her some warm broth to drink. Lunch's kittens are currently staying at Mavis's house, as Mavis and her kittens left on a private jet to get to Japan, where Mavis will be participating in the Olympics.

This morning, however, Jake got concerned when Lunch struggled to breathe. She was out of breath after going down the stairs of her house, and then collapsed on the ground, gasping for air. Jake picked her up (it was no easy task, believe me), and brought her to the hospital. Lunch was admitted today and has been given an oxygen mask. Doctors have already done some testing on Lunch, and they are sure that she does not have the first version of COVID - 19 - she has a variant. In fact, when the very few cats that have come in (like Lunch) after testing positive for COVID - 19, have had some different variants of the first COVID - 19 virus. The doctors named the variants as according to the Greek alphabet. Alpha, Beta, Gamma, Delta.

Image above - Lunch, who isn't feeling very good.

Pretty good photo, huh?

However, the virus in Lunch's blood did not match up to any of those variants. The doctors did some research, and then named the new variant Lambda. It was the first case of the Lambda variant, and doctors realized that this might be an especially bad case of COVID - 19. Lunch was moved into a room with a ventilator, just in case, and then the doctors broke the bad news to Jake. His face turned white when he heard that Lunch had the Lambda variant. Then, the doctors left to make some calls to other doctors, warning about the Lambda variant. Jake didn't tell Lunch's kittens yet, but instead went to Harvey's house for a therapy session. He also paid for an additional week of therapy, 3 times a week, but Harvey refused the money when he heard why Jake needed the therapy.

Image above - Makenna, who is concerned for Lunch, even during her blue light spa treatment.

“We named variants after the Greek alphabet - humans are too dumb to do that!”

- SOME DOCTORS

However, Lunch enjoyed all the videos, and the wishes for her to get better soon.

Every cat who knows Lunch is very concerned for her. Mavis recorded a short get well soon video for Lunch, Rudy's kittens acted out a short play on video, and Judy came to the door of Lunch's room and tried to give her a yoga lesson. Naya made her kittens shape out Lunch's name by going into funky different positions. It didn't turn out too well, because Naya's kittens weren't exactly adept balancers.

Subscribe again for sickness!