

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Mavis has won the gold!

After a fabulous race, Mavis has brought home a gold medal, and a world record for fastest time recorded through 5 laps of the square track. She also set a record for fastest speed achieved while riding a tricycle, as Mavis achieved a shocking 73 mph, enough to get a speed ticket on a 65 mph freeway, and smashing the previous record of 66 mph. It's hard to believe, but then again, cat tricycles are meant to be faster than human tricycles. That's why no kittens have ever recieved a tricycle for a birthday.

Image above - Rudy, who right now doesn't mind anything - almost anything.

Right now, all cats are celebrating. It is still 2 A.M., and kittens have not been able to get any sleep. However, sleep is not needed when your parents are so happy that they say yes to you having a bottle of beer. At the school gymnasium, cats are jumping up and down, and cheering for Mavis, who has just come over to say hello. She has not gotten her gold medal yet, but will very shortly. However, she is surely relishing the feeling of having about 100 cats cheer her on. Her kittens have just joined her, holding sodas and popcorn, but smiling very widely. One of Lunch's kittens smirked, as they had even better popcorn that Jake had spent about an hour popping. Mavis's kittens scowled even more when another one of Lunch's kittens held up a can of beer.

However, the mood was very high when Jake and Lunch eventually turned off the TV, as the TVs went off in other houses nearby. After a little more sleep, the real party was yet to come. However, in the morning, Lunch didn't wake up. Jake prodded her, dripped icy water onto her face, but Lunch didn't wake up. Jake got worried and checked her pulse, which was there, but was very weak. Jake got up and when Lunch's kittens asked what was wrong, Jake told them that he was taking Lunch to the hospital and that they were to stay put. Usually Lunch's kittens would be overjoyed at a chance to be completely alone without any sort of supervision, but this time, they were just worried.

Image above - Lunch, in the hospital.

“A coma? Wasn’t Harvey just in one?”

- JUDY, WHO IS SHOCKED AT THIS STARTLING NEWS

At the hospital, the doctors checked Lunch all over, and made the horrible realization that Lunch was in a coma. It could have been caused by too much activity while sick, but luckily, this would give Lunch a good chance to fight off the COVID - 19 virus. It was like she was constantly sleeping, and therefore always fighting. The doctors quickly hooked Lunch up to a feeding tube, and put her in a room with many monitors. A good thing was that Lunch's life probably wasn't in danger. There was just the fact that she might not wake up for months. You know what they say. All gold clouds are partly corrupted.

Subscribe again for more celebrations, and prayers for Lunch.