

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Stripy and Mavis are okay!

Though there was fire for a little bit in Stripy's kitchen, Mavis reacted quickly and got out the fire extinguisher. One spray right on the fire put it out, and cats viewing from home could be heard cheering. Even the sautéing vegetables were okay, so Stripy started right back up where she had left off. However, the viewers had spiked to around 760,000 by the end of the show, and when Stripy posted the recording, it flew to the top of "trending" in about 20 minutes. The views climbed and climbed, and Mavis's catTube account was also checked out, as she was the heroine who had saved Stripy's house from a kitchen fire. Videos and images of the fire and Mavis putting it out were up all over catTube, Catstagram, Catbook, CatTok, and Flutter.

Image above - Rebecca, who called the fire department when she saw the recipe paper catch fire on Stripy's show.

The good thing was that nobody was hurt. However, Stripy got a bit paranoid after that incident while thinking of her kittens and what could happen, and sold her gas stove at a cheap price to get a new electric one. However, the casserole turned out wonderful, and both Mavis's and Stripy's kittens loved it. Mavis has asked when she could come back on the show, and Stripy is thinking of offering her a post.

Today, total views on the fire across all social media platforms reached a new and crazy high. Since each time you see something on social media, it gets another view, you can watch something over and over again and it will get that amount of views. So, just half an hour ago, total views on all platforms combined reached a startling high on 100 million - that's more views than there are cats in the world. However, some cats watch this kind of video over and over and over again, so it gets more views that way. Of course, it doesn't have that many views on each platform, just 100 million over all.

Image above - Rudy, who thinks that if she was in Mavis's position and Judy was in Stripy's position, she would have let Judy's house burn down.

However, all is okay in Stripy's house, and since the new stove as come in, things have been much smoother. Including the sauces made on the stove. Stripy now does not have to worry as much about stuff catching fire, because the heat is generated under a covering. Stripy's kittens are still not allowed to use the stove, but will be allowed sooner than if Stripy had kept the gas stove.

"I could take a wolf, no problem!"

- GRAYPELT, ONE OF JULIET'S KITTENS, AND A CAT WHO DOESN'T KNOW WHAT THE HE  HE'S TALKING ABOUT.

While cats feel relieved for Stripy however, something not so good is making its debut. Out in the woods, a huge pack of wolves was spotted, moving toward Pawsville. Cats could probably defeat them, but not without great losses on both sides. The police have called for help from Coffee, who is sending some tanks over to help in the fight. However, this may be an evacuation situation.

Subscribe again for more on the wolves!