

CATS ILLUSTRATED

The pack of wolves is coming closer!

As Coffee sends troops of soldiers from the palace, the pack of wolves in the woods surrounding Pawsville is getting closer. The police have set up barricades in places, and are urging cats to evacuate. But cats have had a long rivalry with wolves, and most are staying to protect their home. Rudy is offering cats shelter in her house, except Judy of course. Harvey is working on armoring his Jeep, and North, Makenna, Smoke, Reposado, and Rudyjudy are working on armoring up their house - it already has a bunker, but they want to protect everything.

Juliet has her kittens barring the doors and windows, and enforcing the walls with steel plates. It is tiring work, but Juliet can't do it herself. She had her stomach pumped yesterday, and whatever causing her bellyache was removed from her system. She feels a bit queasy now, but because of the thought of what happened during the pumping. Blackpelt is working on organizing food, and is going through cans of tomato soup and smelling them to see if they are still good. They probably are, even though they have probably been in the cabinet since before Juliet was born.

Just now, something amazing has happened. Rudy did an act of kindness for Judy that would make cats in a theater cry if they knew how hard it must have been for Rudy. However, at first glance it may seem a bit rude. Rudy walked up to Judy, who was hammering on steel plates to her house, and tossed Judy her wallet back. "There you go," Rudy said gruffly, and then walked away. However, she ruined the moment horribly by stopping to pee on Judy's vegetable garden. Rudy walked away after that, Judy not knowing what to think. Cats did not urinate in public, and Rudy had done something quite rude. Judy had her wallet back, which was good, but there was no money in it.

The pack of wolves has breached one of the barricades that the police have put up, and will be officially in Pawsville soon. Most cats have armored up their houses, and are ready to defend their homes. The award of best armored house this time will have to go to Lunch's house, with steel platings covering the house, spikes in the yard. Tripwires were all over, and there were special stones that reacted to weight and would send arrows flying at whoever stepped on the stone. There were gun holes in the sides of the house, and cannon on top, cameras all around, laser sensors, and other holes in the house where kittens could stick out a sword and joust with wolves.
