
CATS ILLUSTRATED

The wolves are attacking!

Now, after a bit of time, the pack of wolves has breached the city limits. They have raided a grocery store, and have tried to attack a house. No cats have been hurt, but Coffee's military troops are almost here. These wolves are a very big problem. They are approaching the area of the best armored houses though, and we can already predict that there is going to be a big and bloody fight.

Image above - Lunch, who doesn't want wolves to destroy her home.

Some wolves have stepped tentatively into Judy's yard, but jumped back in alarm after sharp spokes came out of the ground. The wolves made their way around those, and then started throwing themselves against the door of Judy's house. That was it for Judy - she ordered her kittens to stick their spears out the windows to drive back the wolves, and that they did. The wolves retreated, but kept coming back.

North had seen a couple of wolves near his house, and he noticed something odd. Most of them were scrawny, with ribs showing. North called the police to report this, and the police agreed with North. If these were just hungry wolves, they could be herded back to the forest. The police asked for volunteers to drive some cars pushing the wolves back into the forest, and the wolves were slowly but surely moved back to their rightful home. However, they whimpered in fear even after the cars left. That was peculiar for sure.

This morning, a hiker found the corpses of the full pack of wolves, all 17 of them. They called the police to report it, and then waited for them to arrive. The police checked out the scene, and then decided to have an autopsy done on one of the wolves. The autopsy determined failure of all organs the cause of death. The other wolves had died the same way. But it isn't common to see failure of all organs at once - and it might be impossible if 17 wolves died the same way, and probably at the same time. This made the police look around to see if there was something watching them, but there was none. However, in the end, the police called the case a killing.

Image above - Judy, who wonders what might have killed those wolves.

“If the house is armored, devices are charged, and there are snacks, I’m happy.”

- LUNCH, DESCRIBING HER DREAM SITUATION

This is an odd case, because there is almost nothing that can kill 17 starving wolves at once, let alone make their organs fail. If there is a spirit though - this could get interesting. The police are definitely open to ideas - but it is looking increasingly like the works of a being formerly unknown to catkind. This might get interesting in the coming time, and most cats have decided that they want to keep the armor on their houses on - just in case. But if this is a spirit that killed the wolves, armor might not help.

Subscribe again for more on this mysterious situation!