
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Mavis has gotten into juggling!

In the past few days, Mavis has gotten into juggling. She is okay at it, and is up to juggling 3 balls comfortably. She is taking a class, and is enjoying it as well.

Image above - Rudy, who likes to juggle as well.

While Mavis juggling poses no immediate threat, there was an incident yesterday when Mavis tried to juggle three cabbages. She dropped one, caught the other, and accidentally threw one at a lamp. The lamp shattered, and the cabbage rebounded off of the wall to hit Mavis in the stomach. She stumbled, and fell on one of her kittens. The kitten fell upon impact, bumping their head on the wood floor. They were unconscious, but Mavis rushed them to the hospital just in case. The kitten was okay, but had a big bump on their head. The first thing they said when they woke up was, “no more juggling cabbages mama,” and Mavis promised she wouldn’t try to juggle cabbages again.

Some cats find this incident a bit concerning, such as North, who thinks that Mavis should have juggled the cabbages outside of her house, if even. Now she has a kitten with a bumped head and a broken vase, and a bunch of lost confidence. However, Mavis still wants to keep juggling, and is determined to win a ribbon in the county fair that is coming up.

Ahh, the county fair. Sights, smells, fried butter on a stick, you name it. We have not covered the county fair before, well - it has never been the time of year. In the beginning of October, there is a week long county fair with rides, shows, competitions, vendors, etcetera. Kittens have been counting down the days for months, and Rudy is looking forward to holding Judy’s head underwater at the apple bobbing stand. Not too long, just for a show of strength. Harvey knows that he can get special sugar fries at the fair, and will be there for a whole day at least - hopefully under Makenna’s guidance.

Image above - Harvey, who’s going to try fried butter on a stick.

“There’s a competition for picking pockets- Naya’ll crush everyone.”

- STRIPY

Lunch is super excited for this county fair because her Luncheon has gotten a stand in a very popular place. She has been setting up with her employees at the small restaurant space that she got. Lunch has been bringing potatoes over (for a special occasion, she’ll not use frozen fries), and has been putting up Lunch’s Luncheon banners with her face on them. Other food stalls near Lunch’s spot are looking a bit intimidated, as Lunch has been adding some different meals to her menu - including corn on the cob, fish or veggie burgers, and a salad for those finicky cats who don’t want to eat too much junk food. Lunch has also been experimenting with ice cream making, and may serve that too.

Subscribe again for more on the county fair!