
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Ice cream is in short supply!

As there have been many gang riots recently, a lot of shipments have been interrupted, and ransacked. Most ice cream in Pawsville is shipped in by trucks, but because many trucks are being ransacked and other drivers are refusing to drive in fear of a looting, luxuries like ice cream are in very short supply.

Image above - Juliet, who is used to having a bowl of ice cream a day with her daily gaming time.

When Lunch went to the store yesterday to stock up on ice cream, there was only one small container in the freezer, of mint chip ice cream. Lunch grabbed it before any other cat in the supermarket could, just in case. Then, she went to the cashier and asked why there was only one container of ice cream in the store freezer. The cashier told Lunch that she was lucky to even get any ice cream, and about how shipments were being interrupted or just weren't coming at all. When Lunch got back to her house, she told Jake and her kittens that they would have to start rationing the ice cream she had bought along with the ice cream that they already had.

Many cats around Pawsville surged over the remaining ice cream, and some shop owners, like Rebecca, owning an ice cream shop and all, raised the prices for ice cream, making cats go even more crazy for it. However, not all cats are completely deprived of ice cream. Mavis orders custom cabbage ice cream from Rebecca, and since she has already paid ahead for three containers a week, Mavis is not getting overcharged. However, not many cats want cabbage ice cream, so Mavis will be set for a while.

Juliet is one of the hardest hit cats, as she was just finishing off a large bowl when Blackpelt rushed into Juliet's house, panting. He had moved out, so this must be serious. Blackpelt told Juliet that when he had been going to the store to get ice cream for himself during his studying time, there had been only a few cartons left, and he had been lucky to get his favorite flavor. Juliet, out of ice cream herself, rushed to the store, but unfortunately, all the ice cream was gone by the time she got there. Juliet is now driving all around town, searching for a store or a cat who will sell her ice cream at any price.

“Mama doesn't mind this ice cream shortage - she'll just steal some.”

- NAYA'S KITTENS

only get one spoon a day, even though Rudy and Judy treat themselves to large bowls after their kittens' bedtime.

Subscribe again more more on ice cream problems!

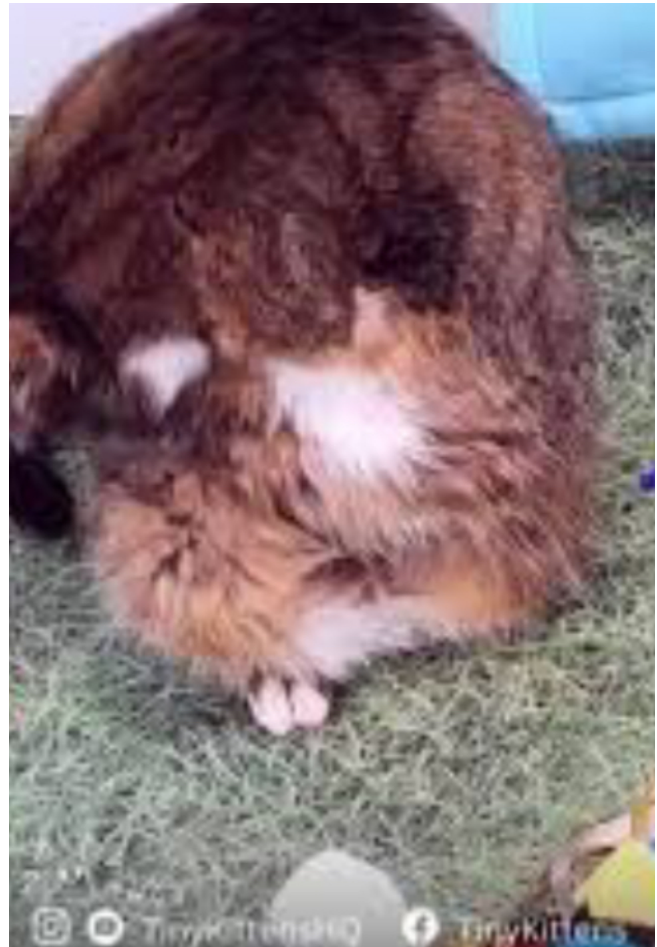

Image above - Harvey, who knows you don't need ice cream when you have sugar.