

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Cats are discovering shaved ice!

As ice cream is still in short supply, and the weather is still freezing, with snow on the ground, cats have been getting creative with their sweet treats, and yesterday, Lunch discovered the wonders of shaved ice. She was just eating some snow off of the ground, and accidentally spilled some soda into it. Lunch tried it, and her brain popped with the flavor of the wonderfully flavorful ice. Immediately, Lunch went to the store and bought out their supply of strawberry, orange, and blueberry soda, and collected a lot of clean snow just sitting on the ground. Then, Lunch let her employees try her new creation, and then set up a stand on the street.

Image above - Harvey, who doesn't see any problems in coating shaved ice in super sugary sauces.

---

Immediately, cats came over to see what this new kind of dessert was. It was ice, but shaved into small shavings - and then on top, there was flavored soda? This sounded odd. However, when cats got a taste of it, Lunch had to make a limit of one large cone of ice per cat. We stepped in and made investments on this new kind of dessert, just in case it got famous. Lunch took a video of cats eating the shaved ice, and posted it on social media. Within hours, though, cats all over were shaving ice and pouring soda on it. Lunch had started a trend, and sure enough, we had been very wise to invest in this new dessert invention.

Last night, Lunch was up late getting a patent for her new invention. She started a small company just for shaved ice, and already, the shares we bought have skyrocketed in price. Now, Lunch is happily stringing a banner on her Luncheon that says "home of the shaved ice." Lunch will serve shaved ice in her Luncheon as well, to many cats' delight. However, some cats don't think too much of shaved ice.

Rudy thinks that shaved ice is better with more ice and less flavor, because then there is a lighter soda flavor and you get to enjoy the cool and crunchy shaved ice. Judy thinks that shaved ice is good with more soda, because then you get fizzy, sweet soda and the occasional crunch of shaved ice. Us, too happy with our new investment to be annoyed with Rudy and Judy, have told them to put there cones together, one with less soda and the other with more, to get the perfect balance. Rudy and Judy were both skeptical, but they tried it.

"I see yellow snow in the woods - is that shaved ice?"

- WILBUR SPOTS, WHO'S SEEING PEE SNOW

Hopefully, this new dessert will take cats' minds off ice cream, as that is in short supply at the moment. However, cats who run a ice cream shop, like Rebecca, are not happy with this new kind of dessert.

Subscribe again for more on shaved ice!

Image above - Lunch's kittens, who ate shaved ice for dinner yesterday.