An acrobatics competition is approaching!

As you may have heard in the last issue, an acrobatic tournament is coming up. This has sparked lots of kittens to start practicing, and some kittens have achieved some pretty cool things. Lunch and Jake will be participating with their kittens, and they have been practicing flips and poses on their trampoline. Mavis's kittens want to participate, but Mavis feels that acrobatics really aren't her thing. Rudy is thinking about participating, but is waiting for Judy to make a decision. Judy feels the same, vise versa.

We have never witnessed an acrobatic competition before, and many cats feel the same. Is it like gymnastics? Is it dangerous? Well, it depends. If it is just a six kitten pyramid like the one Mavis's kittens are attempting, it is not too dangerous at all. However, if it involves six kittens bouncing at the same time to propel a larger cat into the air and then catching them, like Lunch's kittens are doing with her, then that may be a bit more dangerous. However, the prizes for this competition are quite attractive. First place will win you a lovely certificate, a small cash prize, and tickets to an acrobatic centered circus. Second prize is the same, just without the circus tickets. Third place just wins you a certificate. You may be thinking that those are not particularly good prizes, but of course, if you win this, you get on TV, as this a reasonably well known county competition. So, you will get a lot of recognition if you win this as well as the prizes.

As cats get ready for the competition, there has been some good news. As the small war in neighboring cities is calming down, delivery trucks have been shipping in ice cream, and other luxuries. Many cats relaxed with a large bowl of ice cream yesterday, as they have not had one in a week. Shaved ice is still quite popular, though, and many cats still are also eating that. However, ice cream coming back is a relief to many ice cream loving cats, especially Rebecca, who got a shipment of ice cream to restock her shop.

“Who doesn’t believe an eight year old, three legged cat?”

- LUNCH, WHO SPEAKS THE TRUTH

North and Harvey have been sending us pictures of them, relaxing in Egypt, and we are satisfied that they are having a good time. Harvey made us a short video of him eating a sugar cube and remarking on its exquisite taste, and then showing us the sugar cube brand, telling us about how they were the sweetest and richest sugar cubes in the world. If Harvey was filmed for an ad, we’re sure lots of cats would see lovable Harvey and buy the product.
