

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Cats have discovered bubble gum!

This Halloween, one cat was giving out bubble gum to trick or treaters. Most kittens hit this house early, so it was Harvey who unearthed the bubble gum first as he has eaten most of his candy.

At first, Harvey thought that the gum was a sucking candy, but that just didn't feel right. So Harvey tentatively bit into it. The gum exploded in flavor, and Harvey started chewing more relentlessly now. Eventually, the gum started to lose its flavor. However, that was when Harvey read the label on the gum - "Bubble Gum." How could you blow a bubble with this amazing substance. Right now, Harvey is looking online for answers to his many gum related questions. However, he seems to have found a video of a cat blowing a bubble - and Harvey is hooked. We are sure that in no time at all he will be blowing bubbles like it's no one's business.

Image above - Harvey, who loves long lasting candy such as bubble gum.

---

Some kittens have unearthed gum as well, and are chewing it tentatively. Most kittens have never seen gum before, let alone bubble gum. The video of the cat blowing the bubble, which is on catTube, has been viewed many times by kittens. They are all trying to blow bubbles, and are discovering gum for the first time. However, the award of the first bubble went to Harvey, though he nearly choked on his gum when he saw it.

After blowing that first bubble, Harvey has come to his senses and went down to the convenience store with as much money as he could find, and has bought three small boxes of bubble gum out of the five boxes on the shelf. This has sparked other kittens to get gum, and Rudy's kittens and Lunch's kittens each took one of the other two boxes. However, parent cats are starting to notice gum as well. Rudy swiped a piece from one of her kittens, and was addicted immediately when she accidentally blew a bubble. Judy's kittens had hired Rice to guard their candy, and when Judy tried to steal something, she was thrown out.

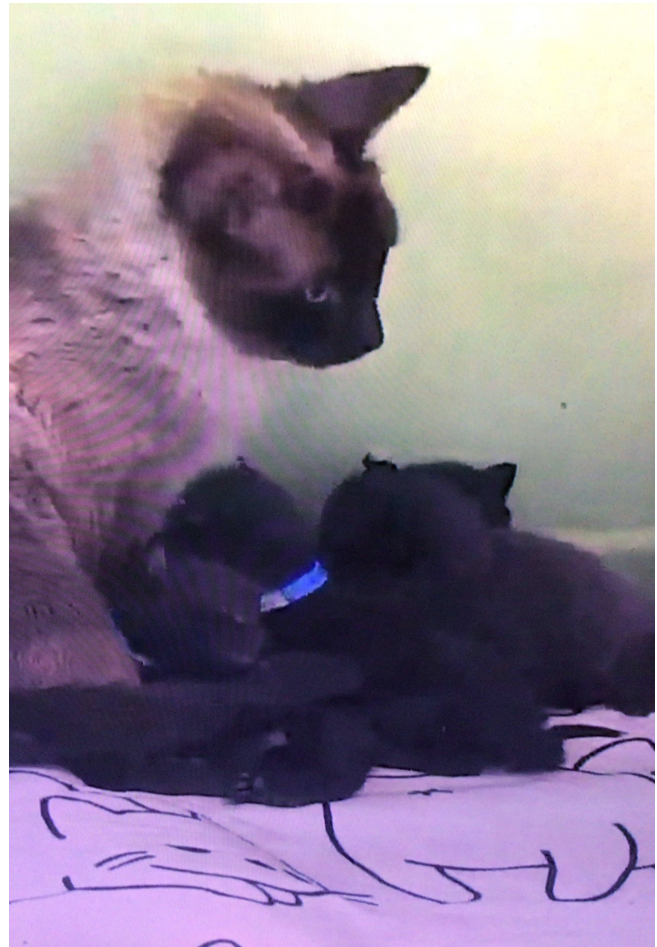

Image above - Lunch, who already buys gum, for her employees at Lunch's Luncheon.

“I stuck a piece of gum where I knew Judy would sit down.”

- RUDY

Gum has been the only talk of kittens for the past time, and it is gaining popularity fast. However, kittens realized something odd about bubble gum. It didn't feel like it was swallowable. When one of Lunch's kittens looked it up, they found out that gum is supposed to be spit out when you are done with it. The webpage didn't specify in a trash can, so it was spitting chaos for Lunch's kittens before Lunch rushed in and made the clarification. A bit too late, as there was gum in strange places already, like under the bed.

Subscribe again for more on bubble gum!