
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Gum is causing a lot of problems!

Though it is a good pastime for many cats, and it is fun to blow bubbles with, gum has been causing some problems. For example, a bully cat stuffed a piece of gum into another cat's ear, and they had to go to the doctor to get it removed. Another time, a cat accidentally touched an old piece of gum, but it must have been there for a long time, because the cat ended up getting sick after touching their paw to their nose to smell what they had touched.

Image above - Juliet, who isn't sure if her kittens should be chewing gum at all.

However, gum is excellent for cats like Harvey, who need to cut down on their sugar intake. While chewing it, it seems to suppress all other sugar wants, and Harvey has been chewing gum for long periods of time, which means that he is consuming less sugar, and that is very good. Harvey usually gets another piece of gum each hour, and right now, Makenna is okay with his schedule.

Unfortunately, another problem arose when a hiker cat decided to try gum. While chewing it, gum also suppresses thirst, so the hiker cat thought that they didn't need any water until they collapsed from dehydration. Luckily another cat was nearby to get them water and help them back home. That is just another problem with gum, and now there is a warning not to chew gum while hiking, because you will end up dehydrated and you might not be near any cats, which would be bad.

Some parent cats are wondering if they should ban gum entirely from their kittens, as it has been causing some problems. However, when kittens heard that, there was a revolt involving the locking up of Naya, who wanted to ban gum from kittens so that there was more for herself. Right now Naya is being held captive in chains, under the watch of her six kittens in a shed. Naya is being ransomed at the price of thirty pieces of gum, and the guarantee that gum will not be banned.

Image above - Rudy, who isn't going to fork over thirty pieces of gum for a thief like Naya.

“We’re going to capture Mama again - and she’ll get an electric collar this time.”

- NAYA’S KITTENS, MAD AT MAVIS FOR BACKSTABBING THEM

Eventually, Mavis gave Naya’s kittens thirty pieces of gum which they shared with their fellow kittens, and she guaranteed that gum would not be banned. Naya was released, and though it wasn’t long, Naya thanked Mavis for rescuing her. However, Mavis went right back to the school board with the claim that kittens had ransomed a cat because of gum, and we have a feeling that gum may be banned in schools soon, and maybe even in the houses of some cats. This will make it more popular of course, and gum is still going to be at large for a while.

Subscribe again for more on gum troubles!