

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Things are calming down in Pawsville!

In the past day, alcohol shenanigans have almost stopped completely. One kitten was caught with a bottle of beer, though, and has been sentenced to no video games or dessert for a week. One of Naya's kittens was caught, too, by Naya, but Naya was one of the few cats who didn't see the harm in kittens drinking alcohol.

Image above - Harvey, who's glad that things are calming down.

---

Mavis has just arrived back from her skiing trip, looking shaky. She has confided in her kittens that on her first ski run, she went on a run with jumps. On her second try, she went on a ski run with trees. And on her third try, Mavis went on a ski run with both. The whole second day of her trip was spent in the ski resort sauna trying to shake the trauma of those three runs put together. The third day was better, though, and Mavis got in some good skiing on an open course. Cats have been asking her how it was, and Mavis has said that you'll have a great trip if you read the signs.

That has made some cats consider a ski vacation sometime soon, because all cats no matter what job they have need a proper vacation at some time. Even Harvey can use a vacation sometimes, because treating therapy clients can be tough and emotional work. North loves his job, but doesn't want to work it five days a week every week. However, North's job gives him four total weeks of paid vacation, which is pretty good.

Now that alcohol is out of the picture, some kittens have focused their interests on the arcade in Pawsville. It is a big arcade, with video games, air hockey tables, a snack bar, and many other cool features. However, the arcade is too addicting for many kittens. Ghost, passing by the arcade, decided he wanted to play video games for the rest of the afternoon instead of buy the groceries that Rudy instructed him to get. Rudy was not happy when Ghost returned home, rubbing his eyes. However, he has told his siblings that the arcade is the best place that was ever invented.

Now, parent cats can't trust their kittens to buy groceries.

"I felt like a kitten when I was playing on that air hockey table."

- JAKE

Even parent cats can be a bit untrustworthy, too, as Jake wanted to play one game of air hockey before getting the ice cream that Lunch had wanted him to buy. He ended up spending all of the twenty dollars he had brought to the arcade, but was crowned the ultimate air hockey champion by some competing cats. Lunch was not happy about this, and right now, if a cat wants groceries, they can get the groceries themselves. Kittens and other cats have proven to be untrustworthy.

Subscribe again for more on the arcade!

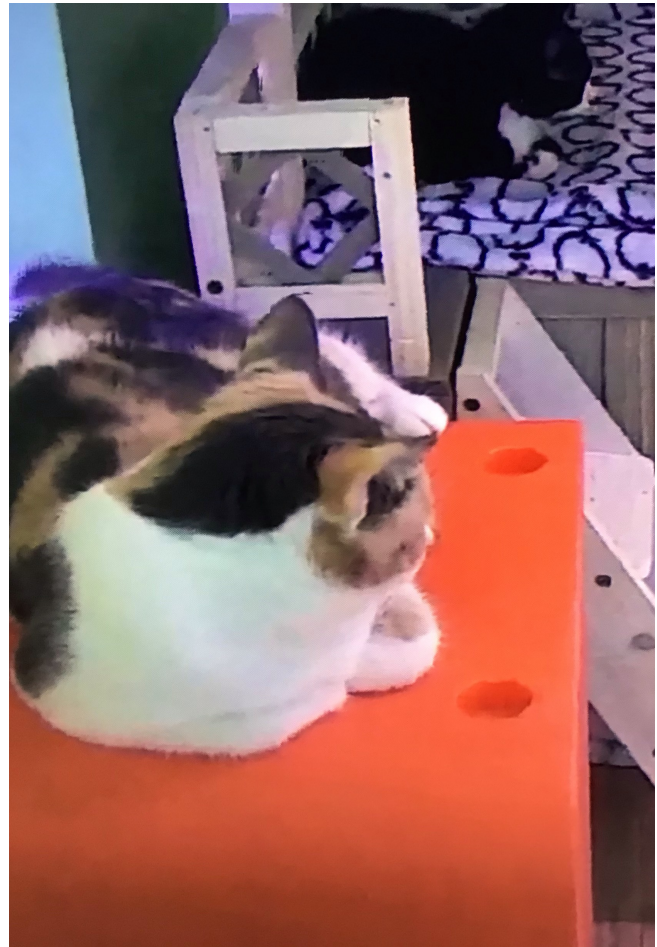

Image above - Juliet, who's going to have to buy groceries herself.