
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats Illustrated has reached its 300th issue!

As of today, November 16 2021, Cats Illustrated has reached its 300th issue. There has been a bad experience with this kind of milestone in the past, when we were a bit deceptive around issue #200. However, we will treat this just like any other issue.

Recently, the arcade in Pawsville has been causing some problems. Cats can't even trust each other to get groceries because the cat on the errand will surely stop at the arcade. However, some kittens are using all of their money in there, and parent cats are worried that their kittens will start getting addicted to the arcade. So, there was a restriction imposed that kittens could not spend more than ten dollars at the arcade a day. Well, that wouldn't be too hard, because kittens didn't even have ten dollars anymore. And that was when the situation got really bad.

Image above - Rudy and her kittens, who want to know what we are going to do now that we have reached issue #300.

Lunch's kittens swiped a twenty from Lunch's wallet, and Judy's kittens lifted a fifty from Judy's money safe. Lunch's kittens got away with their theft, but Judy's kittens were busted. Judy grounded each of her kittens and said that they wouldn't get any allowance for a month, and stormed off clutching the fifty bill in her paws. If kittens were stealing money because they wanted to go to the arcade so much, then there was a big problem.

Some police officers went to the arcade today, to tell the cat who ran it that they needed to put a restriction on how much time cats or kittens could spend in there. The cat who ran the arcade agreed, and now there is a half hour time limit for kittens or cats if you are a regular customer. You can also wait a day without going to the arcade, then get an hour in there. However, kittens found ways to get past this new rule. There is a machine in the arcade where you lock yourself inside and start a fifteen minute game, and one smart kitten went in there just before their thirty minute time limit hit. The cat who ran the arcade had to pull the plug to get the kitten out of the machine before the game was done.

“The arcade is really super fun! We love the video games and all of the snacks!”

- RUDY'S KITTENS

groceries again without getting attracted into the arcade. Still, kittens didn't feel too much like getting groceries.

Subscribe again for more on the arcade!

Image above - Harvey, who knows he'll love the arcade if he goes to it.

Unfortunately, the cat who ran the arcade was forced to take even more serious measures. When kittens went to the arcade today, it was closed. Now, it was only open on Wednesdays and weekends, with an hour long time limit for all three days. Kittens were not happy about this, but parent cats were satisfied because at least their kittens could get them