
CATS ILLUSTRATED

It's flu shot season!

As it is November, cats have begun thinking about flu shots. Parent cats know that it is mandatory for themselves and their kittens, but that does not make a shot sound any better. Some cats, like Lunch, got their flu shots in October. Lunch runs a Luncheon and needs to get her shots early, as she is cooking and serving cats in an indoor area.

Image above - Juliet, who knows she will have to get a flu shot eventually.

Judy's kittens do not like shots. But we already heard from them in Issue #167. Harvey is okay with shots, and we have heard that he got his shot yesterday. Harvey has said that "I didn't know when the needle was in, and I didn't know when the needle came out." That was a big vague, but Harvey seems to be okay after the shot experience. However, Lunch's kittens are a different story.

"I'm gonna drink a bottle of beer and get drunk," Black is telling us, "then Lunch will ground me and I won't be able to go out of the house for a shot. See? Foolproof." Maybe Black didn't want to say that to us, because Lunch reads Cats Illustrated and will find out about Black's plan soon enough. "If I tie up Jake and put him in the basement," Stygian has mused, "then maybe Lunch will let us skip shots so that Jake can be free. Who knows though - Lunch hasn't really forgiven Jake for spending her money at the arcade instead of buying groceries."

The most nervous cat about shots is Ghost, and he has been using his elusive powers to avoid talking to Rudy about shots. However, Rudy and Blackspots teamed up today, and Ghost was brought into the car with his siblings, as it was shot day for them. Ghost was not happy the whole ride to the clinic, and was super nervous at the clinic. No need to go into any more needle or clinic details.

Image above - Juliet and her kittens, who are super nervous about getting a shot.

North is one of the few cats who doesn't mind a shot. He got his flu shot today, and he has told kittens that the relief afterward is super wonderful. However, one of our reporters checked the clinic footage to see what North's reaction was, and it was more of a wince. But that's the kind of footage you don't show to kittens who are already scared about shots.

"I screamed when the needle jabbed into my skin, and I lost a lot of blood."

- RUDY, WHO'S TRYING TO SCARE JUDY

Juliet's kittens will be getting their shots today, and Juliet is promising that they can get ice cream afterward. Hopefully, all of Juliet's kittens will not wince or cry out for the sake of their siblings in line behind them.

Subscribe again for more on flu shots!