

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Pawsville is flooding!

As Three Tails river is flooding, some of that floodwater has been flowing into Pawsville, which is slightly below sea level. Many cats have predicted that this would happen, and they are prepared. Naya left with her kittens and essentials in a camper yesterday, but other cats were hard at work preparing for the flood.

Image above - Lunch, who thinks she is well prepared for the flood.

---

Cats have barricaded their houses and have put out drainage systems in their yard, and are ready to suck up any water that flows into their homes. However, there is barely any water on the streets right now, and no water will need to be sucked up until there is more on the streets. But unfortunately when water, comes, it comes in numbers. Only Harvey has seen a flood movie, and he knows that small hoses and barricades can't defend against a strong flood.

At the East end of Pawsville, water has started to rush in. Now there are a couple of inches of water on the ground, but it is rising quickly. Luckily, only a few cats live on that side of town, and the main part of Pawsville is more to the west. However, the storm drains have already started to clog, and now there is nothing that will stop the flow of the water. The main flood barricade has been set up, and it is slowing the flow of the water a little bit. But not by enough.

Now cats are starting to realize that this situation is more dire, and they have been taking extreme measures. Harvey ate a bunch of sugar cubes so that if he never ate sugar cubes again, he would die with the taste of sugar in his mouth. Rudy went over to Judy's house, picked Judy up, carried her outside, and tossed her into the floodwater. If that was the last thing Rudy did, she might as well have some fun. Kittens raided fridges for beer, because if they died, they wouldn't be punished for drinking. However, Lunch did not give up. The floodwater was creeping up on her Luncheon, and Lunch would not have that. She has set up huge buckets to catch the water, and is ready with a hose to suck up any other water.

“We just called Naya - she and her kittens are driving back right now!”

- MAVIS

drains and sucking up all of the floodwater. But at least no cat was hurt in the flood.

Subscribe again for the cleanup!

Image above - Juliet, who is very scared of the flood.

And that was when the flood stopped. It just stopped flowing. Kittens looked up drunkenly, Judy looked up from where she had pinned Rudy, and Harvey looked up, white sugar staining his muzzle. Lunch sighed in relief, and cats started to realize that this was not so bad. They went back to their houses, while other cats got to work on clearing the