
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Naya has been arrested - twice!

After being caught pickpocketing cats in a large square, Naya was arrested and was forced to give all of the stolen wallets, money, and other things back to her victims. Naya was taken to the police station, and is sitting at a table for questioning right now. However, a different police officer arrested her again, when they saw Naya reach for a police officer's wallet. The wallet was returned, but Naya, with her tricks, "could not find the money."

Image above - Harvey, who knows that this is classic Naya behavior.

Right now, Naya is facing a night or two in jail, because pickpocketing is pretty serious. She is also paying a fine of one hundred dollars, to discourage her from pickpocketing any other cat. However, it would take a military block formation, a thirty foot cage, and a knife at each of her kittens' throats to stop Naya from pickpocketing. And most police in Pawsville don't have the authority to command a military block formation.

Naya really ticked off her officers when she slipped a wallet from the prison guard right outside her cell. That also made Naya popular with her cell mates because she was willing to share the wallet's money. And prisoners are like Naya - they can hide money where it will never be found. The prison guard got their wallet back, but without a lot of the money formerly in it. But even professional searchers could not find the missing money — and you wouldn't want to know if they did.

Kittens, seeing how good Naya was at pickpocketing, got inspired to try it out. Most kittens were caught and got a chewing out, but Stripy, in her own little world of casserole making, didn't miss a ten bill she had in her apron. And every little triumph makes kittens confident — a bit too confident, maybe. A bunch of kittens went straight to the police station, saying that they had a crime to report. The kittens sneakily grabbed wallets and money sitting out, flashed their loot, and made a break for it. And that is how eleven kittens joined Naya in her cell.

“I was told to look extra gruff, dangerous, and crazy in the video.”

- MANGE, ONE OF THE OTHER CATS IN THE CELL

before Obsidian, holding Lunch's cell phone, posted a video of himself, the other kittens in jail, Naya, and their cell mates on catTube, titled “Locked Up.”

Subscribe again for more on pickpocketing!

Image above - Lunch, when she heard that four of her kittens were in jail.