
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Today is Thanksgiving!

Today is Thanksgiving! Cats have been getting ready, and are ready to prepare large meals. Lunch's Luncheon has been preparing a special Thanksgiving menu, and Lunch slept a full eighteen hours last night to be ready for the cooking ahead.

Image above - Lunch, who is resting up to be ready for Thanksgiving cooking.

Classic Thanksgiving meal staples for cats include a large roast turkey, creamy mashed potatoes, gravy, assorted vegetables, cider, and of course, pie. Cats love any kind of pie — apple, pumpkin, cherry, pecan, and a few others. However, if there is a lot of food on Thanksgiving, that means there is a lot of cooking to be done. Some cats just go to Lunch's Luncheon for a meal that is cooked by someone else, which usually includes turkey, mashed potatoes, vegetable of choice, gravy, and a few other sauces and garnishes to choose from. And when you are done, you can get a large slice of pie which can be one of three flavors — apple, pumpkin, or pecan.

Lunch is always cooking on Thanksgiving, but she closes early at six and invites Jake and her kittens and her employees' families for a special meal. Lunch's kittens are always smug with other kittens on the day after Thanksgiving, because most kittens don't get as good as a meal as them on the holiday. That fact is a sad truth, because most kittens have to tolerate the cooking of their parents. Judy once remarked that Rudy couldn't toast a piece of bread without exploding something, and unfortunately that is a fact. In the end, Blackspots does the cooking without help from Rudy, but his Thanksgiving dinners are rushed and are not his best work.

Image above - Judy, who can't cook very well herself.

North enjoys Thanksgiving, but he thinks that cats don't really get the purpose of the holiday. In fact, very few cats even talk about what they are thankful for, even though the name of this holiday should suggest something. There was a survey done last year about what cats thought the purpose of Thanksgiving was, and in the end it was found that ninety-three percent of cats thought that Thanksgiving was just supposed to be a feast, and only six percent thought that Thanksgiving was for giving thanks. The other one percent of cats was a bunch of kittens who teamed up to say that the purpose of Thanksgiving was to drink alcohol.

“You say there's a lot of food on Thanksgiving? I'm in!”

- HARVEY

Thanksgiving is a very nice holiday for cats, usually because it means a week off from school for kittens. Even though not many cats voice things that they are thankful for, it is still a very fun holiday.

Subscribe again for more on Thanksgiving!