
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Judy has a minor case of frostbite!

After falling into the frozen lake a few times yesterday, Judy has a minor case of frostbite in her right front paw. She slowly warmed it up at the hospital, and has been told to get some rest. However, what will happen to her paw next is unknown. Hopefully, it will be just fine. But there is always the possibility of amputation...

Image above - Judy, who's resting on doctor's orders.

Many cats are worried for Judy, and have been sending her get well soon cards. Rudy doesn't seem to care, and she hopes that Judy has to get her right front paw amputated. If that happens, Rudy will have another thing to taunt Judy about. However, Rudy is Rudy and every other cat hopes that Judy does not have to get any more treatment on her right front paw. Judy has it made in the hospital right now, as she has her video game console, lots of snacks, and tons of get well soon chocolates.

Though Judy is the only cat to have gotten frostbite, some other cats have gotten really cold out on the frozen lake and in the snow. Harvey has claimed that he couldn't feel his belly after sliding on it for three hours over the frozen lake. Harvey's skin and fur were very cold, and North had to give Harvey a belly rub before Harvey could feel his belly again. Grappelt, who slid on his behind for a whole day, has said that he doesn't even feel his behind anymore. He proved this by sticking a pin in it, which didn't hurt at all but was probably not the best way to prove it. Both Rudy and Judy have chased each other over the frozen lake while sliding on an assortment of parts, and they have each fallen into the freezing lake water quite a few times. However, Rudy knows how to get warm again after being dunked in thirty degree water, unlike Judy.

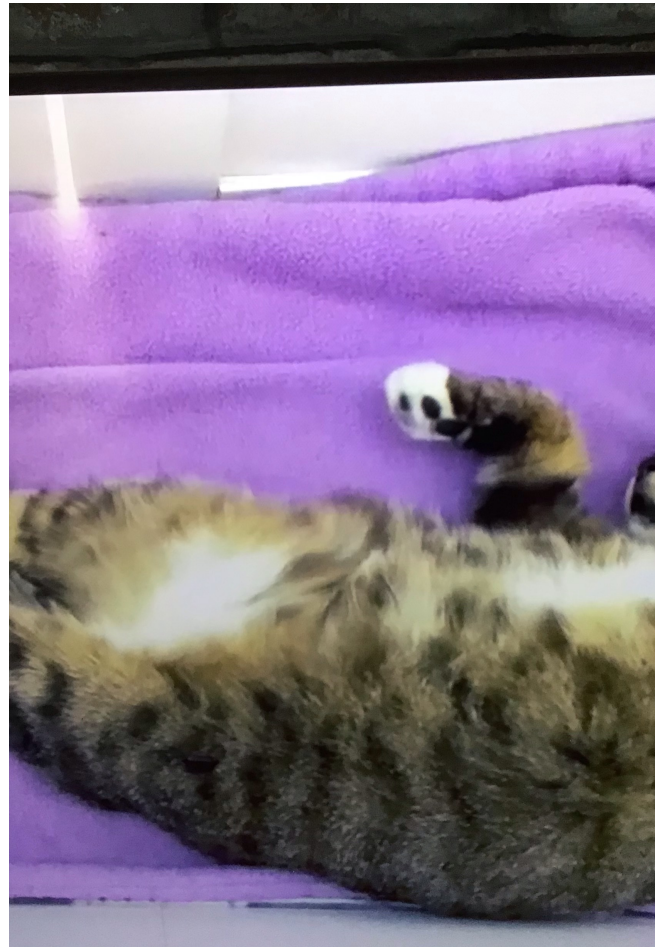

Image above - Harvey, who doesn't get why any cat would go onto thin ice even on a dare.

While some kittens and cats are out on frozen lakes, it has started to snow a little more in Pawsville Now, you can see more kittens sledding down large hills, building snow versions of themselves, and having epic snowball fights. Adult cats are happy that kittens want to be outside, because that means the video game console is freed up for about four hours.

However, adult cats also like the snow, and you can sometimes see cats like Lunch or even Makenna riding a trash can lid down a steep hill.

"I can't wait for Christmas!"

- WILBUR SPOTS, EVEN THOUGH CHRISTMAS IS NEARLY A MONTH AWAY

The weather is getting colder, and cats have been starting to think about the winter holidays, including one that happens on December twenty-five — but those are pretty far off.

Subscribe again for more on this cold weather!