
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Kittens are excited for Christmas!

Because the month of December has rolled around again, kittens have been very excited for Christmas. However, it is very early to be thinking about that sort of thing, and cats think that kittens need to learn how to be patient.

Image above - Juliet, who knows Christmas is a full twenty four days away.

"I'm excited for Christmas too," says Harvey, "and my birthday is coming up. My birthday is December twenty two, and Christmas is three days after that! I hope I don't get joint presents though, that has always felt like a rip-off. But I know that I have to wait a while for those days, even though they are very exciting." Many cats agree that they should probably stop thinking about Christmas until nearer to the big day, and should also encourage kittens to try to forget about Christmas a little bit. But maybe not those words exactly, because that could spark a fight.

Lunch's Luncheon has been decorated in a winter theme, and Lunch has been revising her menu to put in more Christmasy foods, including stuff like savory pies, more carrots and green beans, and of course more mashed potatoes. Lunch considered taking sugar fries off of the menu, but she didn't want to see or hear Harvey's reaction to that. However, Harvey did hear about the idea, and he pledged to vandalize Lunch's Luncheon if sugar fries were removed from the menu.

While some cats have been thinking about Christmas, another concerning issue has arisen. Cats in Pawsville are usually very good drivers, but ice on the road has caused some concerns. Yesterday, a cat taking a turn as fast as they usually did in any other season slid on the ice on the road, and ended up clipping two trash cans, a mailbox, and another car. The day before, a cat trying to brake couldn't get enough traction on the road and rear-ended another car. Just today, there was nearly a crash when a car on the road swerved half into the lane going the opposite way in front of another car.

Image above - Rudy, who's going to use the excuse of "driving on ice" to smash up Judy's car.

"I stole the snow tires right off of a car!"

- NAYA

Today, the automobile repair shop in Pawsville got some chains cats could put on their tires. They also sold snow tires with extra traction for a large price. However, cats are smart, and they bought up the chains and the snow tires no matter how much it cost them. Hopefully, there won't be any other near incidents or crashes because of snow or ice on the road. Unfortunately, there will always be a cat who doesn't buy snow tires or chains, and speeds around curving streets at forty miles per hour.

Subscribe again for more on car troubles!