

CATS ILLUSTRATED

Juliet was in a minor car crash!

Yesterday, when Juliet was driving, she took a turn too fast and skidded on the ice into the other lane. The car in that lane swerved to avoid Juliet, but the cars collided on one side.

Image above - Juliet, resting after the crash.

The cat in the car only got a few scrapes and bruises, and they understand why Juliet accidentally hit them. Juliet was not injured either, but she offered to pay for the repair damage to the other cat's car. However, Juliet was using snow tires in that incident, and this proves that the roads are still too icy. Right now, there is a team of cats out on the streets of Pawsville sprinkling salts onto the icy roads. The city is hiring a few cats to do salt rounds every morning, so the roads stay dry and there are no more incidents such as this one.

Blackpelt, Juliet's mate, is very concerned for her health, because even going through an incident like that really shakes you up. Juliet has been saying that she doesn't want to drive again, because she doesn't want to hurt any cats. Juliet's kittens have been comforting her and telling her that there is only a very small chance that she will kill a cat while driving. However, that's not the kind of fact Juliet needs to hear to make her feel better. Harvey was invited over to give a therapy session, and he has been talking to her about what exactly she is afraid of in driving. Hopefully, Harvey can help Juliet feel better.

While cats deal with the problem of icy roads, snow has really been piling up outside houses, and that is causing some problems. Lunch's house is protective against the rain, but snow leaks through the boards and Lunch's floor is often wet. However, it has started to snow a lot more, and Lunch has not been able to put snow blockers in place. Her Luncheon is much more watertight, but it is too much work to shovel the sidewalk near it every day.

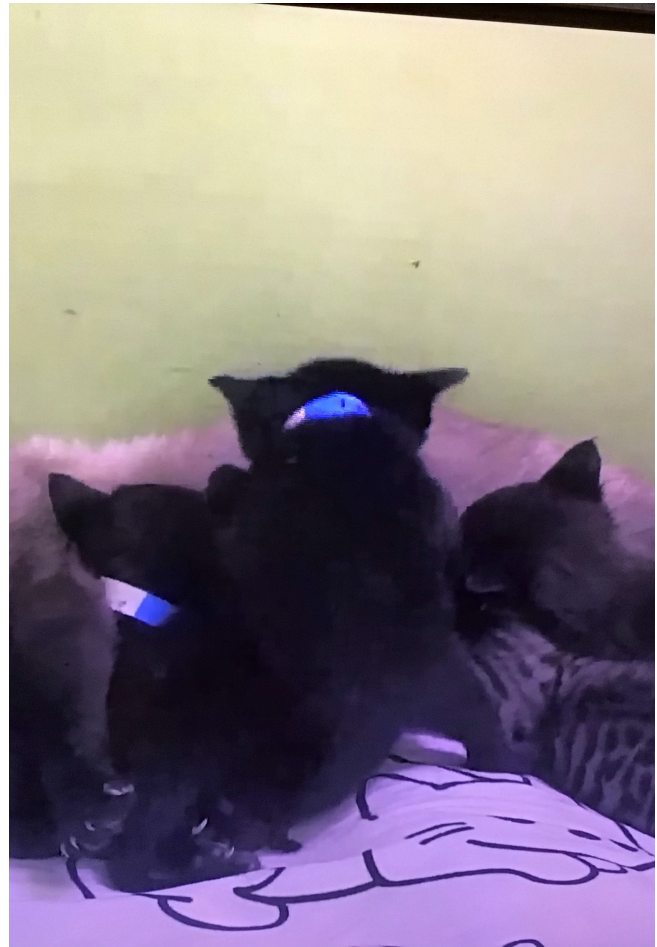

Image above - Lunch, taking a rest.

“I think you’re out of ideas for the “Subscribe again” line.”

- NAYA

While some kittens play in the snow all day, other kittens have decided to work for pay. Today, Mavis's kittens offered to shovel Rudy's driveway for ten dollars. Rudy accepted, because she really didn't feel like shoveling it. Soon, many kittens were offering to clear sidewalks and driveways, for pay of course. Many cats accepted these offers, because why do something when someone can do it for you? That may not be the best message to put into the heads of cats, but at least in this arrangement, it all works out for every cat, including kittens, who are buying all the junk food they like with their new money.

Subscribe again for more on snow shoveling businesses!