CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats Illustrated may be taking a break!

Because of winter break, many cats have vacation plans. We, too, at Cats Illustrated are needing a break, but there is the chance that we will still continue issues over the winter holidays.

A few of our reporters have already left on trips, so we are working on a skeleton crew. However, there are good stories around this time of year, so maybe we'll continue the issues! Right now, some cats, including Lunch, Jake and their kittens, are packing for trips. Lunch is the kind of cat who saves the packing for the last minute, and she has also had to prepare her Luncheon. She has put one of her best employees in charge, with directions for how to handle each of the situations that Lunch is sometimes in. But Lunch has very good employees, so her Luncheon is in good paws.

Rudy and Judy have fought a few more times, giving each other a few scratches and bruises. On both fights there were surprising crowds of kittens watching it, even though it was one o'clock, which is a school hour. Betting was also taking place, and some kittens were winning big but others were losing money. Naya was waving her Rudy and Judy signs with everyone else, and Juliet's kittens were making a killing off popcorn sales. However, kittens fled when the principal, tipped off by a kitten, came charging down to Rudy and Judy's fighting arena. While the kittens hid, Naya sorted things out with the principal, using her age to her advantage.

Harvey is going on a short drive up into the mountains, where he is planning on camping for a few nights. He would have gone alone, but both North and Makenna have insisted on going with Harvey. He is happy about this, as one of Harvey's favorite sayings is, "the more the merrier." He will be driving his Jeep up the rocky roads, a good use for its four wheel drive function. However, Harvey still has three spare tires in case the Jeep crashes.

“One kitten ran when the principal stormed the fight — bad choice.”

Juliet is feeling better after her bout of food poisoning, and though he wanted to get takeout, Juliet convinced Blackpelt to make chicken pasta last night. However, Blackpelt overcooked the chicken just in case it could be raw, because he still felt so bad about giving Juliet food poisoning. But Juliet is still willing to eat Blackpelt's food because he makes a killer chicken pasta. Right now, cats are just getting started with preparations and setting up for the winter holidays. Cats are feeling very jolly, and are ready for winter break.
