
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Judy has burned herself!

After carelessly sautéing vegetables in an open pan, Judy accidentally splashed herself with a few large drops of hot oil. Her shriek called Max, but he didn't know how to treat a burn so he took Judy to the E.R. However, the burn was treated easily and doctors were a bit cross with Max for bringing a cat to the E.R. when they only had a simple burn.

Image above - Judy, resting after putting ointment on her burn.

Rudy has been all over this incident, claiming that Judy is a danger to herself and should be watched twenty-four/seven. Of course, Judy does not want this, but Max isn't sure if Judy should be cooking unsupervised. So, from now on, Judy must have a partner if she wants to cook. Judy is very mad, and she has stormed over to Rudy's house with a frying pan to show how dangerous she can be with kitchen utensils. Luckily, Rudy spotted Judy in time to set up a wall of spokes outside her house.

Also, the results of some end of unit assessments have come back. Kittens did generally well, but there were standouts and low points. The highest score was Stripy jr.'s, which was an outstanding ninety-six, and the lowest score was Wilbur Spots, who scored a nineteen. Kittens have said that Wilbur Spots got distracted by a butterfly during the test, and only answered half of the questions, spending the rest of the time chasing the butterfly. However, even Naya's kittens scored at least thirty, and the school is thinking about holding Wilbur Spots back a year.

The school has been talking to Juliet and Blackpelt, informing them of Wilbur Spots's low score. They would usually have him take a re-test, but the school has been seeing Wilbur Spots's lower grades and they have been wondering whether they should have him redo sixth grade. Wilbur Spots does not want this, but Juliet and Blackpelt are seriously considering it. It would be hard, having five kittens in one grade and one kitten in the grade before, and it would be extremely hard when five kittens went to college and the last had to wait a year.

Image above - Juliet, who's thinking about holding Wilbur Spots back.

“I don’t want to be held back while my sibilings go to seventh grade!”

- WILBUR SPOTS

under supervision because she can be careless while cooking.

While Juliet is doing hard thinking, Judy is still sore over her burn and how she must be under supervision when cooking. However, Harvey knows how Judy feels, as he must also be under supervision while cooking, but for a different reason — Harvey can't help but pour sugar into any recipe, which can make things like casserole or salad taste strange. Judy is Subscribe again for more cooking incidents!