

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

Cats have been sleeping in lately!

Though the title of this issue may sound boring, cats have been sleeping in a lot lately, which is interesting. Judy went to bed around her usual time, and she woke up at eleven in the morning, sleeping right through her alarm. Right now, cats are wondering what is causing this interesting phenomenon.

Image above - Rudy, who woke up at one and missed a sports game.

---

Harvey is used to sleeping in, but he wasn't expecting to be shaken awake by Makenna at three in the afternoon, her telling him to get ready for a therapy session starting in the next few minutes. The client had been waiting for a bit, and Harvey did not understand why or how he slept through two meals without waking up to eat. This has made cats very confused, because even the smell of food can make Harvey jump out of bed and run to the table. But this is causing problems for kittens, too.

Stripy's kittens usually go to bed at about ten o'clock, and they wake up at seven. Stripy expects them to get ready for school on their own, because she has to do lots of peacemaking early on weekdays. But yesterday, her kittens slept past eight and were discovered sleeping by Stripy just before she left, so she woke her kittens up and told them to get a move on. Stripy's kittens were late for school, and they were very confused about how they had slept so late. This has been happening with other kittens, too, and Mavis's kittens were lucky to be seen by Mavis before it was too late. However, the most unlucky kittens were Juliet's kittens, who were trusted with getting ready for school without an adult cat in the house. But today they slept in, and have just woken up around twelve o'clock realizing that they were missing school.

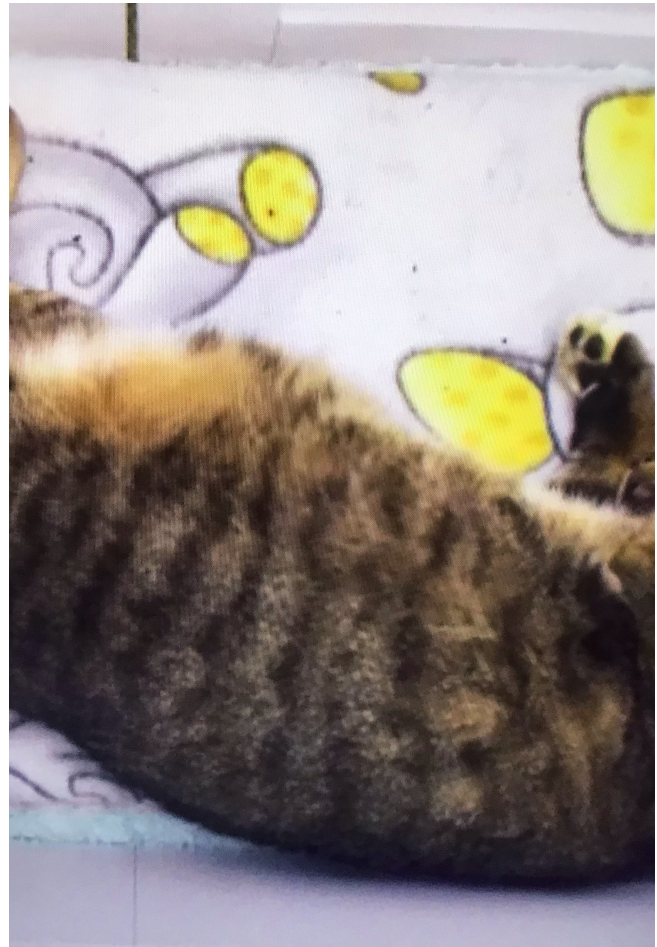

Image above - Harvey, whose sleep schedule is screwed up.

A lot of parent cats have been waking their kittens up if they can, but today, Naya, who wakes up at six in the morning, was seen peacefully resting in her bed until ten in the morning. Naya's kittens didn't wake up until nine, and they rushed off to school, late by about a half hour. However, even teachers were affected. Rudy's kittens' teacher was very late, and when some kittens went out to investigate, the teacher was nowhere to be found. It turned out that their teacher was still sleeping at their house, and had slept through a couple different alarms.

“Sleeping is the perfect excuse to miss school!”

- JULIET'S KITTENS

Judy's kittens have been sleeping a lot too, and Ice missed the chance for a big detective job, and he isn't happy about it. Cats are wondering why they are sleeping in so much right now, because it is causing problems.

Subscribe again for more on sleeping in!