
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Icicles have been seen in Pawsville!

As the weather in Pawsville is very cold after a warm stretch, icicles have been popping up on overhangs and buildings. Lunch's Luncheon had a row of icicles coming down from the roof, and Judy's house was laced with icicles all over.

Image above - Lunch, who doesn't usually see icicles around Pawsville.

Icicles have attracted the attention of kittens, too, and they enjoy playing games that involve throwing a snowball to knock down icicles. This is fun, and it can keep kittens occupied for hours on end. However, icicles have proven to be dangerous, too, as yesterday a falling icicle knocked by a kitten hit a cat on the back. The cat was okay, with only a medium sized cut, but now kittens and adult cats alike are more careful when they are around or playing with icicles. And this danger element has also attracted the attention of Rudy and Judy, who have each knocked down some icicles and stored them in their freezers as projectiles.

Temperatures in Pawsville have dropped to as low as negative ten degrees, which is making any snow rock hard and is giving adult cats a case for making their kittens wear extra snow gear when going outside. However, today Juliet's kittens read that it might be cold enough so that if you spat, your spit would freeze before it hit the ground. It was almost true, as the spit mostly froze, but it also splattered on contact, which has sparked a spitting war between kittens. But any splattered spit froze as well, and kittens had very icy coats when they went back inside their houses.

Harvey found a very large icicle on his roof, measuring a full foot long. Both Rudy and Judy offered to buy it, as a foot-long icicle would be a wonderful projectile as it could cause some serious damage. But Harvey wisely declined both Rudy and Judy's offers, even when Judy offered to give him a pack of sugar cubes and ten dollars. However, the longest icicle found was on Naya's house, and it measured a full one-and-a-half feet. Rudy and Judy also offered to buy that, but Naya just declined the offers and stole their money.

“I ended up selling my big icicle to Rudy — but it was for two packs of sugar cubes and a free Jeep cleaning!”

- HARVEY

Image above - Judy, who is going to try to make some icicles.

Rudy and Judy have gotten the idea from Mavis that they should make their own icicles, by pouring water on the roofs of their houses and letting it freeze. This has worked well, and both Rudy and Judy have been crafting mega-icicles and storing them in freezers. But Naya doesn't want Rudy and Judy to have all of the projectiles, and today half of the icicles disappeared from both Rudy and Judy's roofs. Naya has stored her stolen icicles in her freezer, and she is waiting for the right time to use them.

Subscribe again for more on icicles!