
CATS ILLUSTRATED

Cats are thinking up New Years' resolutions!

As it is two days to New Years' Day, cats have been thinking up New Years' resolutions. For those of you who don't know what a New Years' resolution is, we can tell you that it is something that you resolve to try to do or not to do in the New Year. Here are the resolutions of a few cats:

"I've resolved that I am going to stop stealing pocket watches in the New Year," says Naya, who steals pocket watches, "they are rarely worth anything and I want cats to remember the exact time that they were robbed. Therefore, I will not be stealing pocket watches anymore." Naya's resolution could have been bigger, but at least she's stepping in the right direction.

Image above - Lunch, who has resolved that she will stop eating Twinkies in the New Year.

Rudy and Judy however, are not. Rudy has resolved to egg Judy in the face twelve times in the new year, at different times or in one big assault. Judy has countered this with the resolution that she will find a way to give Rudy food poisoning after January first.

Harvey's resolution was pretty deep, as he resolved to make a decision about whether he wanted a prosthetic arm by the New Year. Harvey was out checking out some options yesterday, but he still isn't sure about whether he wants a prosthetic arm. But Harvey doesn't have the only deep New Years' resolution. Stripy has resolved to donate a quarter of her casseroles to charities and homeless cats. Many cats think that this is a good idea, and other similar resolutions have popped up in Pawsville. However, popular New Years' resolutions had something to do with cats' diets.

Lunch, after thinking for a long time, resolved that she will not eat Twinkies in the New Year. Lunch has read about how bad Twinkies are for cats, but she also loves them so much — so Lunch will be trying to replicate Twinkies by baking them herself. Many cats will be excited to see the outcome of that. But not all food-related resolutions are good ones — Mavis's kittens resolved that they would up the junk food in their diets by fifty percent.

Image above - Juliet, who's resolved to stop eating Kudo's entirely.

“I've also resolved to eat fifty percent less sugar in the New Year!”

- HARVEY

A couple resolutions have been seen as dangerous, like Stygian's resolution that he would reach forty feet in a bounce on his trampoline. However, Jake has resolved that he will insist on a thirty foot bounce limit on the trampoline, which is ruining the resolutions of a couple kittens, all of whom had dreams of forty to sixty foot bounces. But that was a good resolution, because at least there won't be any broken bones from any kittens. But there might always be that one bounce that soars particularly high — maybe forty feet, maybe more.

Subscribe again for more on New Years' resolutions!