

CATS ILLUSTRATED

A Kandy for Kittens store is opening in Pawsville!

As you may know, there is a new candy company called Kandy for Kittens, or K4K, that is making its debut to the world. However, in recent days, K4K has been criticized for its name, and its intentions of selling candy mostly to kittens. So that they weren't shut down, K4K made its grand opening a month early. This means that if any cat wants to shut them down, they will have a lot harder time doing it now.

Image above - Rudy and her kittens, talking about K4K during mealtime.

Kittens are very happy because of the K4K store opening in Pawsville. However, the two employees had limit the number of kittens in the store at once, and line the others up outside to wait their turn. Harvey came in a few times, seeking sugar bites and gumpops. Kittens have been looking for money wherever they can find it. They don't have to pay as much, with a twenty percent discount, but each kitten at the store is still spending at least three quarters of their money. And we've heard that the store is calling to get their restock early.

Because kittens have spent their money so fast, parent cats are getting worried that the thought of K4K candy is addicting. Juliet has already forbidden her kittens from buying K4K candy, but they have disobeyed her and are buying K4K candy like most other kittens. However, Lunch, Mavis, and Rudy met together and decided that it was time to put a stop to this candy craze. They are marching up to the K4K store, ready to yell at whoever's in charge about how they should stop selling so much candy to kittens. Kittens will also be forbidden from buying any more candy from K4K stores, with punishments such as confiscation and the loss of screen time for a week.

Harvey believes that kittens should be allowed some candy, but not the crazy amount that they are buying daily right now. Harvey is a regular customer at K4K stores, so he has begun giving out candy to kittens daily. Maybe just a gumpop and a sugar bite per kitten, but it has been enough to satisfy most kittens. Even parent cats are fine with this kind of candy eating, if Harvey is monitoring it.

Image above - Lunch, who doesn't want to admit it, but thinks that the idea of a gumpop sounds oh so good.

"I buy K4K candy in bulk and I sell it to my kittens!"

- NAYA, WHO PRICES HER CANDY ABOUT TRIPLE WHAT THE K4K STORE WOULD CHARGE

Adult cats are still questioning the intention of K4K and their candy stores, but for now most cats are okay with their kittens having a few pieces of candy a day from Harvey. Because at least their kittens aren't asking them for money. But still, if K4K sweetens the deal for kittens, or comes up with a very kitten-directed candy, no kitten will be permitted any K4K candy.

Subscribe again for more on K4K's future!