

---

CATS ILLUSTRATED

---

The power has gone out in Pawsville!

This thunderstorm is still raging, and tree roots are getting loosened because of the water flowing into the ground. A tree must have fallen into one of the power lines, as the power just went out in cats' homes.

Kittens are not happy at all now that the power has gone out. Parent cats have duct-taped fridges and freezers shut to keep the remaining stuff in them fresh, so that means no cold drinks. There are still good snacks in the cupboards, but what use are good snacks if there are no video games? Kittens' moods have gone from accepting to annoyed, and they have not been feeling good since the power has gone out. Adult cats also wish that the power had stayed on, because at least the TV was entertaining. Now, there wasn't too much to do.

Image above - Juliet, who knows that no power means no video games.

---

Kittens have been eating their K4K candy to pass the time, but their stashes are growing low. Mavis's kittens were craving something sweet, like ice cream, today. However, the only ice cream left in Mavis's freezer was cabbage ice cream, which wasn't to the taste of Mavis's kittens. In the end, they settled for some sugar that was in the cupboard. It was sweet, so very sweet. But Mavis's kittens aren't the only kittens in need. Rudy's kittens have been looking for a treat in their house, but Rudy and Blackspots have both stashed away the good things, like cookies and candy, for themselves. All that is left is an assortment of potato chips, vitamins, and dried fruits. None of these foods are sweet enough for kittens right now.

While kittens search for sweet treats everywhere, Harvey has all of the sugar he could ever need. With two full cartons of sugar cubes, a dozen GumPops from K4K, cookies, and other sweets, Harvey is set. North drank his whole soda stash already, as his mini-fridge was also affected by the loss of power. This means that North is craving something sweet, and Harvey's candies and cookies and sugar cubes are looking pretty good right now.

Image above - Judy, who's stolen all of the good treats in her house for herself.

“It isn't a long walk to Harvey's house — I might be able to steal some candy.”

- NAYA

without power, there are no video games, no TV, and no freezers to keep ice cream in. A couple cats have tried to call for a repair team to come and fix the power lines, but the phone lines are down as well.

This power outage is affecting many cats, and we hope that the power will come back on soon. The rush for sweet treats is still on, and kittens will be at the K4K store the second the storm breaks. The K4K company has expected something like this, so they have stocked up extra. But right now, the main concern in cats' minds is the power, because Subscribe again for more on this power outage!